Repeal Vote Won 302-98 in House On Pink Slip Law

'Soak the Rich' Forces Crushed by Foes of Tax Publicity.

Senate Test Faces Secrecy Advocates

Leaders in Upper House See Defeat Certain for 'Anti' Bloc.

By Douglas Warrenfels.

An embattled "soak the rich" minority was crushed yesterday as the House voted 302 to 98 for repeal of the pink slip income tax publicity law.

Advocates of secrecy, however, still have a big hurdle to jump—the Senate. The publicity move originated there and sentiment for retention was described as unchanged by Chairman Harrison, Senate Finance Committee.

Party lines were shattered as advocates of repeal snowed under the House opposition at every test. Outspoken supporters of the Doughton antipublicity bill were Chairman O'Connor, Rules Committee, and Representative Snell, minority leader.

"Next to the snooping that went on under the eighteenth amendment," O'Connor protested, "this law is the greatest violation of the privacy of the citizen in history."

"The only possible excuse for publicity," Snell roared, "is to cater to the most sordid inquisitiveness in every community."

Cheers Sweep Chamber.

Deafening cheers swept through the chamber as the opposing forces tried to outshout each other. Members who sought to debate the issue were harassed with cries of "vote, vote," and had difficulty making themselves heard.

Representatives Sabath (Democrat), Illinois, and Blanton (Democrat), Texas, made enough noise to delay passage for a time. They emphasized the "danger" of tax evasion in case of repeal of the statute requiring all income taxpayers to accompany their returns with pink slips showing their gross earnings and the amount taxable.

"The demand for repeal," Sabath stormed, "comes from those millionaires who have made fortunes during the depression. The Republicans are for repeal because they don't want the people to know how thousands of business men have prospered under a Democratic Administration in the last year."

Chance in Committee.

Blanton insisted even if the House voted for secrecy the Senate would "kill it as dead as Hector" and leave his colleagues "suspended in midair." Charges that publicity would encourage racketeering were ridiculed by the Texan as "manufactured just to scare you."

"I'm not going to undo in five

Dry State Firm Can Buy Liquor

Oklahoma Court Rules Wholesaler May Sell to Licensed Dealer.

By the Associated Press.

Vinita, Okla., March 11.—Federal Judge Franklin E. Kennamer ruled today a wholesale liquor company in a wet State may sell liquor to a licensed dealer in a dry State, declaring the wholesaler is not responsible for distribution of liquor sold to a person holding a Federal license.

Judge Kennamer, after sustaining a defense demurrer to a conspiracy charge against the Brookshire & O'Neal Wholesale liquor Co., of Joplin, Mo., said:

"It is hard to understand why the Government will issue a license for the sale of liquor and then turn around and punish the licensee for selling liquor."

The charge involved J. T. and M. W. Turknett, charged with transporting liquor into Oklahoma for illegal sale, although they hold a Federal license.

The former was released and the latter, who admitted illegal transportation of liquor into Oklahoma, was fined $150.

Treasury officials took immediate steps yesterday for a careful study of the decision of Judge Kennamer, according to the Associated Press.

Arrangements were made for a conference with Justice Department attorneys as soon as the text of Kennamer's opinion is available. Pending that time, officials declined comment or to say whether an appeal will be taken.

Fire Menaces Bolling Field; Three Burned

Soldiers Risk Lives to Prevent Blaze Reaching Gasoline Tanks.

Heroism of three soldiers at Bolling Field, all of whom are in serious or critical condition at Walter Reed Hospital, yesterday checked a fire, which, if uncurbed, perhaps would have resulted in a major catastrophe, according to Maj. Martin F. Scanlon, post commandant.

The men:

Private William Locke, 24, critical.

Private William Williams, 26, critical.

Corpl. Leo. L. Copp, 44, serious.

The trio, according to Maj. Scanlon, stopped a fire which for a time threatened to spread to 30,000 gallons of gasoline in three tank cars on a siding near the gasoline storage house and to untold gallons in an underground compartment.

Heroism Is Praised.

"It would have been a terrible thing if it had not been checked," said Maj. Scanlon.

"There is no doubt that if the fire had ever reached the tank cars or the other storage compartments there would have been a conflagration that would have swept the field or an explosion that would have destroyed it.

"I can not say too much about the heroism of the three men who are badly burned as a result of their daring sacrifice."

The fire, for hours considered in Washington to have been a minor affair, since only one fire alarm was sounded for District apparatus, was potentially packed with dynamite, according to final reports.

Several Buildings Menaced.

In the immediate vicinity of the siding, in addition to the gasoline storage house, are the post garage, the Air Corps supply buildings and one hangar.

It was believed that even if the fire had not caused an explosion it would have spread to these buildings and from those to others throughout the reservation.

The fire originated when the corporal and two privates were filling a truck used to refuel airplanes.

From some unaccounted cause a switch on the motor operating the pump was thrown and the resultant sparks ignited gasoline around the truck and in the warehouse.

Sensing the danger, the three

Germans Add Air Defenses, Defying Pact

Army Absorbs Civilian Group Despite Ban in Versailles Treaty.

British Uphold Increase in Arms, Citing U. S. Naval Action.

Developments yesterday in the world armament race were:

Germany's "Air Sports" Association formally was declared part of the Reich Army in violation of the Versailles Treaty.

Great Britain's increased defense appropriations were upheld in the House of Commons. Increased United States arming was cited by Stanley Baldwin, speaking for the government.

By the Associated Press.

Berlin, March 11.—Germany's civilian "air sports" association was placed under direct orders of the Reichswehr (regular army) department today, thus becoming part and parcel of the Reich's defensive forces.

By this action the air clauses of the Treaty of Versailles were ignored, it was said on good authority.

The change, effective as from today, became known in foreign official circles. Military attaches of signatory powers of the Treaty of Versailles, it was reported, will be called together March 23 and informed of the change.

Germany is forbidden a military air defense corps under the treaty and she is reported to be determined to carry out her present defense program, regardless of the pact.

An official intimation was given in advance to British and Italian air attaches today that Germany now possesses an air defense corps.

Psychological Moment.

Officials of the department of Gen. Hermann Wilhelm Goering, minister of air, were represented in other quarters as believing the psychological moment has arrived for announcing the new development, particularly since it is thought Germany came out on top in the recent diplomatic incident involving Britain's white paper on defense and Sir John Simon's visit here.

A non-German government official said subsequent steps, as now planned, will be the naming of a complete corps of officials, the completion of a number of air fields throughout the Reich, the open training of aviators, whose previous drill has been subrosa, and finally the purchase of whatever airplane parts Germany desires from foreign countries.

Fields Planned.

One source said 14 airfields are planned. This informant expressed the opinion that the changing of the civilian "Luftsportsverband" or "Air Sports Association" was mostly one of names, since to all intents it is already a well-equipped and well-trained organization.

Its members today adopted the Reichswehr salute instead of the Nazi salute.

Estimates of the number of members of the air league vary considerably, from a few hundred fliers to several hundred thousand. The latter figure includes untrained street collectors, boys who joined the air league instead of another Nazi group which has no special qualifications, and ground men.

Gen. Goering, it is believed, will continue to have complete, but enlarged powers over the air plans. His other ministerial functions, which include the premiership of Prussia, may be given over in partly to others to leave him freer for a fuller development of the air force.

The disclosure of the change was said to be partly occasioned by knowledge that the semi-secret preparations, like building airfields near Berlin, could scarcely be kept from general knowledge much longer.

By the Associated Press.

London, March 11.—Great Britain's increased appropriations for defense were upheld by the House of Commons otnight, which defeated a labor motion of censure, 421 to 79. Pacifists had carried their

Priest Brands Johnson Political Corpse, Cites Own Duties as Citizen

General 'Great Casualty of New Deal,' Father Coughlin Says.

Detroit, March 11.—The Rev. Charles E. Coughlin, replying to Gen. Hugh S. Johnson's characterization of him as one appealing "to the lunatic fringe," declared tonight that Johnson is a "political corpse"—the "first great casualty of the New Deal."

Father Coughlin made his answer to the former NRA administrator in a 45-minute radio address broadcast over the same hook-up which Johnson used a week ago in assailing the priest and Senator Huey Long as the two "mad Pied Pipers."

Johnson charged that Father Coughlin was using his "priestly office" to head a "revoluntionary party." Answering the former NRA chief, Father Coughlin defended his right to speak on political problems as a "citizen" and drew a distinction between his status as a citizen and as a Catholic priest.

"While it was and always will be impossible for me to divest myself of my Catholic priesthood, nevertheless, in accepting the dignities which my religion conferred upon me, I sacrificed in no respect the rights identified with my citizenship," Father Coughlin said. "It is still my prerogative to vote. It is still my privilege to be interested in good government. It is still my duty as a common citizen to engage in a common effort for the preservation of our Commonwealth as chaos clamors at our doors."

Father Coughlin said he had been challenged with "the logic of a braggart" to divest himself of his priestly vocation if he wanted to participate in national affairs.

5 More Killed In Cuba; Spain Sends Gunboat

Trade Halted, Havana Stays Home; Rich Suburbs Visited by Death.

By the Associated Press.

Havana, March 11.—Caught between the lines in a finish fight between the government and the Radicals, Havana and the entire island of Cuba suffered almost total commercial paralysis today under a state of war declared by President Carlos Mendieta.

Mysteriously violent deaths in the capital brought to ten the number killed in a week-end of wild disorder. Five bodies were found today in the exclusive residential suburb of Marianao and a wounded man died in a hospital. Four were killed Saturday night and Sunday.

Most of the island was without transportation, without ice, without mail or newspapers, as union after union joined the drive for a nationwide general strike, against which the government was battling for its life.

Former Official Slain.

Although many stores and commercial houses tried to remain open for business, few of them had clerks or other employes.

The streets of Havana had little traffic because the transportation strike included taxicab drivers and also because the streets were littered with roofing nails by strikers. Some automobiles were equipped with two ordinary house brooms tied in front of the fenders to sweep nails from the path of the tires.

Throughout Cuba only persons

Loyalists Rout Rebel Forces In Macedonia

Thrace Also Is Subjugated; Venizelos May Set Up Own Crete Rule.

By the Associated Press.

Athens, March 11.—The insurrection is definitely crushed in Macedonia and Thrace and Gen. George Condylis, leader of the government forces, is returning to Athens, the government officially announced tonight.

The rebels, on the eleventh day of the revolt, have been blasted from the principal strongholds in Seres, Drama, Kavala Demirhissar, Kotini and Dede Agach, the announcement added.

It also was officially announced the cruiser Helle is in government hands, and, flying a white flag, is nearing the harbor at Kavala.

Rebel Chief Reported Dead.

It was indicated, although not confirmed, that former Premier Eleutherios Venizelos, leader of the rebellion in Crete, has accepted the defeat of his Macedonian and Thrace followers and will proclaim Crete a separate state.

The Helle was reported to be severely damaged, with four holes ripped in her plates during a bombardment. The fate of M. Panayotopoulos, second in command of the rebels, remained somewhat obscure although the governor of Thrace had reported that he killed himself.

Gen. Demetrius Kamanos had crossed the Bulgarian border with 18 brother rebel officers along with the governor of Thrace and sur-

NRA Fights for Life as List Of Enemies in Senate Grows

Prospects for Reenactment of Law Dimmer as Critics Grill Richberg; Wagner Defends His Bill, Warns of Strikes if Section 7(a) Falls.

By Felix Bruner.

With Senators of every shade of political complexion hammering away at it, NRA was fighting for its life yesterday.

The present law expires June 16, and with the third day of hearings before the Senate Finance Committee there were increasing indications that it might not be reenacted, or that if a new law is enacted the Administration will be changed in many essentials.

Of the 18 Senators attending the hearing, nearly every one, with the exception of committee Chairman Pat Harrison, fired questions, indicating varying degrees of opposition to present methods, at Donald R. Richberg, the only witness.

Following the hearing, there was a brief debate on the Senate floor, with Senator Lewis (Democrat), Illinois, the only member publicly defending the New Deal organization.

Meanwhile, before the Senate Committee on Education and Labor, Senator Wagner (Democrat), New York, defended his national labor relations bill, designed to make effective the principles of section 7 (a) of the recovery act.

Wagner told the committee that the principles of section 7 (a) have been flaunted "at the very crucial spots where their observance is most essential." He predicted a series of strikes and lockouts if his bill or similar legislation is not enacted.

A demand for a complete hearing on NRA was made by Senator King (Democrat), Utah, at the Finance Committee hearing. He asked individuals having complaints against the NRA be heard.

Richberg replied that complaints numbering well over 100,000 had been received and that an investigation of these complaints could not be completed in the lifetime of the committee members. He added that most of them had been closed by various NRA agencies.

"It looks to me as though there has been too much effort to help NRA bolster up its case instead of

Ickes Concedes Moses Victory In Dual Job-Holding Conflict

By the Associated Press.

Under somewhat mysterious circumstances, the Roosevelt Administration yesterday backed publicly out of the political whirlpool it started by trying to oust Robert Moses, New York park commissioner, from the $44,200,000 tri-borough bridge authority in New York.

The strange circumstances was that despite the furor surrounding the case, Secretary Ickes, unknown to anyone except an inner few, retracted his order against Moses nearly two weeks ago.

The PWA administrator, who has been holding up funds for the bridge, yesterday advanced another $1,600,000 for it and simultaneously made public a letter to Mayor LaGuardia of New York, dated February 26.

In t he 'construed' his famous "Order 129" of last December, which prohibited men from holding municipal jobs and memberships on PWA authorities at the same time, to mean that this should not be taken retroactively, and that Moses might hold both places.

In several quarters here is was widely reported during the attempt to sheve Mosts out that both President Roosevelt and Postmaster General Farley were kept fully informed of all steps in the effort. Moses was the unsuccessful Reupblican candidate for Governor of New York against Gov. Herbert Lehman in the last election.

What most observers here felt was particularly strange was that even after Ickes had written his letter to LaGuardia, both he and other high administration and public works officials gave no hint publicly that

RFC to Push Realty Loans By New Unit

Jones Plans Agency to Furnish Funds in Mortgage Field.

Business Property Will Benefit; Corporation Due in 2 Weeks.

By Leon Dure, Jr.

Plans for the creation of a new Government mortgage corporation, to operate as a subsidiary through which the RFC can pump new funds into the real estate mortgage market, were announced yesterday by Chairman Jesse H. Jones.

He explained that this venture is contemplated as the first step toward the organization, in each of the Federal Reserve Districts, of private mortgage companies to make loans on real estate—principally business property not aided by other Federal agencies.

The corporation, Mr. Jones declared, will be organized and in operation within the fortnight. Its use, as an agency to dispense credit, will be similar in most respects, he said, to the Commodity Credit Corporation, which makes loans on cotton, corn and other farm products.

The amount of capital for the new company has not been fixed, the RFC chairman said, adding that this is "unimportant" since the RFC can lend it whatever funds are needed. The corporation will be dissolved, he said, whenever private mortgage companies are formed to take over its functions.

Aid to Business Property.

For months the RFC has been attempting with little success to find means by which it could help establish "a sound mortgage market," having in mind particularly mortgages on such properties as hotels, apartment houses and business buildings. One device after another has been tried, but all have failed in providing an outlet for any considerable amounts.

Hundreds of millions have been made available to refinance mortgage-oppressed home owners and farmers, Mr. Jones pointed out, but the need for loans on business properties, especially in the larger cities, is still acute. It is to meet this need that the RFC now proposes to set up a new corporation specifically framed for this purpose.

In a speech at St. Louis last week, the RFC chairman said that President Roosevelt is "greatly interested" in reviving the mortgage market.

10-Year Loans Foreseen.

"We realize," he said, "that liquidation from real estate and mortgages can not be had in a few months, or even a few years, without great sacrifice, and it is our intention to make or extend real estate loans, or loans the principal security of which is real estate, for as long as ten years."

The new corporation will be chartered either in the District of Columbia or under the liberal laws of Delaware, it is understood. Mr. Jones explained that it will be operated entirely by the RFC and will make use of the latter's 32 field agencies.

"Investors are reluctant to enter any business in which there has been so much tragedy," the chairman said. "But they forget that real estate has come off better than almost anything else."

Creation of a subsidiary company to handle real estate loans is made necessary by the fact that the RFC can not, itself, make loans on real estate. Through the new agency, however, the RFC proposes to advance money to distressed holders of mortgage certificates and bonds, and also will be prepared to make loans for new construction.

February Disbursements $65,000,000.

Under authority recently granted by Congress, the RFC is enabled to invest up to $100,000,000 in the stock of private mortgage companies. On many occasions, Chairman Jones has expressed an anxiety to help organize such businesses, and stands ready to match dollar for dollar in their formation.

Ultimately, he said, he hopes to have such agencies in each Federal Reserve District. Regulations are now being drawn under which the RFC will offer to buy stock at a

Six Jailed, Capital Girl Found And Gypsy Romance Founders

A gypsy romance, which began on Seventh street, ended disastrously in St. Charles, La., yesterday when six persons were thrown into jail and a pretty 15-year-old, black-haired Washington girl was restored to her parents. She had been kidnaped, according to one account, while on her way to the movies, choloroformed and spirited away. The Louisiana climax to a tangled web of romance and intrigue came at the end of a 40,000-mile search by her parents.

Washington police, however, were inclined not to take seriously the charges of kidnaping reported to have been preferred against the six prisoners. According to an Associated Press dispatch from Lake Charles, Rose Demetro, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Petro Demetro, of 1536 Seventh street northwest, was recovered when the latter led a sheriff and police officers to a gypsy camp outside the village.

Although the dispatch stated that, upon advice from the Department of Justice, Alex, George, Randolph and Eli R. Miller, and Anna and Lola Miller, were being held on charges of violating the Lindbergh kidnaping act, J. Edgar Hoover, chief of Justice Department agents, disavowed knowledge of the case.

The Louisiana dispatch reported that Demetro told Sheriff Henry Reid, of St. Charles, that the girl was seized while on the way to the movies with 11-year-old Russell Demetro, her brother, on January 7. He also was quoted as saying that chloroform was used in the kidnaping.

At the Seventh street home, part of which is occupied by a dingy fortune-telling shop, a woman,

Underwood & Underwood.
ROBERT A. TAFT.

Secret Parley Is Held at White House to Map Policy.

Taft Suit Threatens Refunding Action

'Doubt' in AAA Blamed as Price of Staple Drops Sharply.

Developments yesterday on the economic and monetary front were:

A suit, filed in the United States Court of Claims, brought a new test of the Administration gold policy which, if successful, would threaten Treasury refunding of millions in bonds.

President Roosevelt called his monetary advisers to the White House to consider gold policy.

Cotton tumbled $7.90 to $9.35 a bale on the New York market—the sharpest drop in seven years. Other markets showed a moderate slump. Brokers blamed the cotton break on uncertainty over the Government program.

By Franklyn Waltman, Jr.

As President Roosevelt yesterday conferred with his advisers on gold policies in a White House meeting tinged with mystery, the Administration's abrogation of the gold clause and its refunding program again were challenged in the Court of Claims.

The challenge came from Robert A. Taft, son of the former President and Chief Justice, and raised a novel point which, if sustained in the courts, might well block the Treasury's efforts to refund millions of dollars of bonds with high interest rates into less costly securities.

Mr. Taft, in filing a suit to collect $1.07 as interest due on a $50 Liberty Loan bond which had been called for redemption, contended that since the Supreme Court has ruled that abrogation of the gold clause in Government bonds was an illegal breach of contract, the Treasury forfeited its privilege of calling such bonds for retirement prior to their maturity date.

Subject of Conference.

Should the courts uphold such a contention, the Treasury would be forced to suspend the huge refunding operations in which it is now engaged or make payment for bonds called for redemption at the rate of $1.69 on each $1—which, of course, is out of the question.

The White House conference was called many hours before the Taft suit was filed. Singularly enough, however, it was indicated that the conference was summoned to discuss whether legislation should be asked withdrawing the privilege of bondholders to sue the Government under the gold clause.

The Supreme Court last month rejected the claim of a bondholder to be paid $16,930 for his $10,000 bond which had been called for redemption, contending while Congress had no authority to repudiate a Government obligation, the bondholder had failed to show any damages. This was regarded as leaving the door open for future suits against the Government. Ever since the Supreme Court ruling was handed down the Administration has been considering withdrawing the privilege to sue—a privilege conferred by law since the Government can not be sued without its consent—on the gold clause.

Hull Joins Conferees.

The White House conference was attended by Attorney General Homer S. Cummings; Assistant Solicitor General Augus D. MacLean; Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau, jr.; Undersecretary of the Treasury Thomas Jefferson Coolidge; Herman Oliphant, general counsel of the Treasury, and Stanley Reed, chief RFC counsel. All these official had a hand in formulating or defending in court the Government's gold program.

Secretary of State Cordell Hull joined the conferences near the end of their meeting and this led to a

Inquiry Hears Swanson Case; To Call McCarl

Secretary Denies Intending Defiance, but Refuses to Yield on Issues.

Republicans will move today to call Comptroller General McCarl before a House committee in the quarrel over Federal expenditures.

Secretary Swanson appeared before the House Appropriations subcommittee on naval affairs yesterday and personally denied he intended to defy the General Accounting Office. He refused to yield, however, on several points at issue.

Representative McLeod (Republican), Michigan, announced he would ask the sub-committee to summon McCarl to explain his side of the controversy. McLeod added he might seek to call Attorney General Cummings also.

Swanson Questioned.

The differences between Swanson and McCarl arose over whether Federal funds could be used to pay travel allowances of the dependents of officers ordered home from within the United States pending retirement.

McCarl, who frequently has crossed swords with New Dealists, ruled the Government could not pay such expenses. Swanson, however, disregarded his decision. He told the sub-committee he was supported by 11 decisions of the Court of Claims and opinions from Attorney General Cummings and former Attorney General Stone.

McLeod and Representative Ditter (Republican), Pennsylvania, figured in several torrid exchanges with Swanson when the Secretary, in ill health, submitted to questions after his prepared statement was read by an aid.

Objects to Procedure.

Under cross-examination, Swanson said he still called on McCarl often for decisions governing expenditures. He explained his department now is awaiting a ruling from the Comptroller General on whether an additional half-day's pay totaling $12,500 shall be granted to 5,000 men.

McLeod sought to show the Secretary would follow the rulings of the agency that held as his department desired in case of a conflict between the Comptroller General's office and the Court of Claims.

Representative Cary (Democrat), Kentucky, chairman of the sub-

N. Y. Attorney's Stock Dealings Sifted by U. S.

Director Backs Purchases in Own Company After Bearish Alarm.

By the Associated Press.

The Securities and Exchange Commission yesterday put before Nathan L. Amster, New York attorney and official of a Canadian mining company, a report purporting to show that he bought heavily of the stock after a directors' letter had been interpreted bearishly by stockholders.

The hearing, involving stock transaction in the Granby Consolidated Mining, Smelting & Power Co., Ltd., of British Columbia, was the first the commission has held relative to stock transactions of directors in their own corporations.

Amster, appearing in his own behalf, declared he went into the market "to protect other people."

"Pessimistic" in Tenor.

The letter, described by the commission as of a "pessimistic" tone, said the directors felt the principal operating company of Gransby should be closed. The letter, said Thomas Lynch, commission counsel, was received about November 9, 1934.

Lynch introduced records to show that Amster bought 16,000 of the 37,400 shares traded in between November 9 and November 21, inclusive.

The stock fell quickly from $6.13 to $4 following this letter, Lynch's report said, then advanced somewhat, and finally jumped up to $7.75 when the company, on Amster's suggestion, sent out another letter calling attention to the fact that the company had quick assets worth $10.40 a share.

Amster appeared at the hearing an hour and a half late, and Lynch informed the commission he had tried but failed to serve a subpena on Amster for the past three weeks.

He Demands Protection.

Amster insisted on his right to stand on his own records, which he offered and of which he said:

"These are exactly 100 per cent true. I swear to them by my God."

At one point in the hearing, Amster objected to questioning with:

"I am an American citizen and I demand protection. You are trying to make me say things I don't mean."

He interposed at another point:

"I go into the market to protect other people and this is what happens to me."

Asked later by reporters if he intended this answer to apply to his transactions in Granby, Amster said the answer did so apply, and had he not entered the market the shares would have fallen to $3.

Roscoe Turner Unhurt As Plane Overturns

Cleveland, March 11 (AP).—Col. Roscoe Turner and two passengers in his plane escaped injury late today when the landing gear of the ship "washed out" as he brought it down in nearby Dover township. With Turner were F. Darius Benham, a friend, and Don Young, mechanic. They were bound for New York from Chicago.

The flier said fog caused him to miss the municipal airport. He circled over Lake Erie, returned and landed in an open subdivision. Turner said it was a "three-point landing but my gear struck a 2-foot ditch. The ship turned over on its side."

Between You and Me

Ickes' 'Crack-Down' Cracks Up; Make-It-Hot Dewey; Cotton Takes a Nose Dive.

By Raymond Clapper

On December 29, Secretary Ickes, as public works administrator, issued Order 129 which laid down a noble principle to cloak a stroke of petty revenge.

This order stated that appointive municipal officials were not to be members of separate "authorities" expending PWA funds. It was explained that a municipal official dealing with a board administering public works money would be representing wholly separate governmental units having conflicting interests. Such a person would be serving two masters. It would be as bad as Postmaster General Farley serving as chairman of the Democratic National Committee.

* * * *

Order No. 129 made high-minded reading indeed. The only thing was that it was aimed at a political enemy of the Administration, Robert Moses, who ran as the Republican candidate for Governor in New York last fall, did some rough talking about Farley, and was a buddy of Al Smith and his secretary of state at Albany. When Roosevelt became Governor, he pushed Moses out and the repercussions of that incident had much to do with feeding the Roosevelt-Smith feud. Moses holds two park jobs for the State and one for Mayor LaGuardia. He also became a member of the Triborough Bridge Authority, which is building a $42,000,000 bridge with PWA money.

Then the Administration cracked down with Order 129, which was official notice that Moses would have to drop his Triborough Bridge job or that of city park commissioner. He refused to do either. The order was widely denounced in New York City as an arbitrary interference from Washington. It was generally regarded as the work of President Roosevelt. Ickes never displayed much interest, and looked as if he was carrying out orders which aroused no particular enthusiam so far as he was concerned.

The bombardment of criticism continued. Ickes last Friday said that Order 129 "stands like the rock of Gibraltar."

News dispatches from abroad have reported no damage to the rock of Gibraltar, but yesterday Order 129 cracked right down its middle. Ickes announced—the text was dated February 23—it would not be retroactive. That left Moses where he was when the light went out. Mayor LaGuardia, winning this point, helped the Administration save its face by saying Order 129 was a good idea which he would follow in the future. The Administration would look less ridiculous if it had thought of this "out" before the order was issued.

Some restless Republicans have built a fire under Representative Bertrand H. Snell, House minority leader. They think he has not been aggressive. The result is that a couple of days ago he went to Representative Dewey Short, a rip-snorting young Missouri Methodist preacher, and asked him to make a speech against NRA.

"Make it red hot," Snell urged.

Short drew the assignment because he has a combination of vocabulary and speed like a thesaurus going through a rotary newspaper press.

He recently addressed the House of Representatives on the works bill as follows:

"I deeply and sincerely regret that this body has degenerated into a supine, subservient, soporific, superfluous, supercilious, pusillanimous body of nitwits, the greatest ever gathered beneath the dome of our National Capitol, who cowardly abdicate their powers and, in violation of their oaths to protect and defend the Constitution against all of the Nation's enemies, both foreign and domestic, turn over their constitutional prerogatives, not only granted but imposed upon them, to a group of tax-eating, conceited, autocratic bureaucrats—a bunch of theoretical, intellectual, professional nincompoops out of Columbia University, at the other end of Pennsylvania avenue—who were never elected by the American people to any office and who are responsible to no constituency."

He didn't really believe all of it himself until both sides broke into loud applause.

On second thought, after hearing from city consumers, Department of Agriculture economists have revised their statistics about rising food prices. Recently the department's economic adviser proudly predicted that food prices would rise 11 per cent by June over those of the last half of 1934. Now he says they won't go much higher than they are now, being up 7 or 8 per cent.

Cotton prices have taken the worst nose dive in eight years following official reports that January cotton exports in volume dropped 44 per cent below those of the same period last year. In value they declined 27 per cent.

The volume of farm products exported in January was the lowest in 20 years. The index figure for January was 57 compared with 93 a year ago. That's not surprising. It's getting so people can't afford to eat in this country either.

Huey Long admitted he wasn't in top form yesterday. He said he was sleepy and tired. Hence his "silent" filibuster, that is, silent for him. He popped up and down during Senate debate, and once talked for about 20 minutes. No one could understand such reticence.

The reason was that he was out late Sunday night with some Louisiana show girls playing at one of the Washington theaters. The Kingfish is on the wagon so he mixed salad dressing for the gals. That's his story and he looked as if it was true.

McLeod Opens Drive to Relax 'Gag' in House

Asserts Discharge Rule Proposed Strikes at 'Vicious' Practice.

A movement to relax House "gag" rules was initiated yesterday by Representative McLeod (Republican), Michigan.

He introduced a petition to force a vote on a bill which would reduce from 218 to 145 the number of signatures required on motions to discharge committees from consideration of measures which they refuse to report.

McLeod said he expected support from members of all four parties. He saidw sentiment had changed since the House earlier in the session revised the rules governing petitions and abandoned the former practice of permitting 145 members to blast a bill out of committee.

"The discharge rule," he argued, "is simply an honorable and effective weapon which strikes at the very heart of the vicious and unworthy practice of circumventing the will of the people by the use of the bottomless committee pigeonhole.

"This resolution simply provides that the duly elected representatives of one third of the American people may present to the representatives of all the people important public legislation for their consideration in that great national forum, the House of Representatives."

McLeod charged a few men "rigidly control" House procedure. He contended the 218 rule placed an "unfair barrier" 'in the path of all members.

"My motion," he said, "is designed to remove this barrier and to assist in breaking up the rubber stamp which has marked a legislative procedure in the House during the past several sessions."

Long's Tactics Again Hold Off Vote on Works

'Silent' Filibuster Used as Huey Is 'Panned' at White House Lunch.

By Robert C. Albright.

Something different in parliamentary tactics, a "silent" filibuster on the works and relief bill, yesterday again held off any Senate action on the President's $4,880,000,000 measure.

Behind the movement for delay was Huey Pierce Long, Louisiana's strutting "Kingfish" kept his tongue except for a few brief effusions. But he checkmated a vote, held attention of the galleries and his name monpolized conversation at a White House luncheon for Senate "freshmen."

While debate on the works bill moved at snail's pace, 13 new Democratic members of the Senate gathered with Majority Leader Robinson and President Roosevelt around a White House luncheon table and talked of many things.

It was learned that Huey himself, his radio antics and his Senate clowning, were the topic of most of the table talk. Senators left the luncheon under impression that Mr. Roosevelt thinks the way to cope with the Louisianan is to ignore him.

Majority Leader Robinson informed the President he may get a vote on the bruised and bandaged work relief bill this week, it was said.

Twenty Minutes Enough.

Although there was no pronounced drive for a vote on any section of the bill yesterday, Long, who had announced he would make no speech, claimed the floor whenever the debate started slowing up and a ballot appeared imminent. But his remarks, all told, charging contemplated use of the $4,880,000,000 fund by the President in his 1936 campaign, were limited to about 20 minutes.

A movement by several Western Senators further to liberalize the bill, broadening the already wide discretionary powers given the President under the measure, drew a spirited opposition speech from Senator Carter Glass, of Virginia, in charge of the bill.

The Virginian argued the President, as the legislation now is drawn, will have authority to "use this money at discretion." Glass said it is "ridiculous" to contend that this power is not comprehensive enough to allow the President to make necessary loans and grants for public works projects.

"My concern right now is greater for the taxpayers than it is for these projects," he said. "I haven't asked for a project for my own State and I don't intend to. Virginia, like any other State, should finance its projects by taxing its own people.

"It ought not to have to come trotting up here to Washington to ask some miserable little bureaucrat to allot it back the money it paid in taxes last year.

"If we are going to liberalize this $5,000,000,000 measure any more than we have, heaven only knows where we will end. But the taxpayers will know after a while."

Costigan Is Leader.

Senator Edward P. Costigan (Democrat), Colorado, led the fight for liberalization. He told the Senate he is authoritatively advised that the Administration amendment "earmarking" the huge bill is not broad enough to permit funds for reclamation, irrigation, water conservation projects or construction of electric conservation plants.

Long made his first brief speech after Senator George W. Norris (Democrat), Nebraska, admonished colleagues they should guard against changing the legislation into "a pork barrel bill."

Louisiana's senior Senator said "Somebody is going to do the pork barrel work," and it ought to be Congress, not the President.

"You are going to give a candidate for office $5,000,000,000," Long shouted. "With an election coming on, is it fair to give one man all of that money?"

Senator Pat McCarran (Democrat), of Nevada, author of the prevailing wage amendment, on which the Administration's first showdown fight will come, denied any part in the recent filibuster. McCarran remained optimistic in the face of confident forecasts that he will be defeated.

"The sooner I get a vote on my amendment, the better I'll like it," he said. "If a filibuster is on, I'm not a part of it."

Speech Back of Delay.

Long's one-man vigil to delay important action on the bill was reputedly inspired by his desire first to get Father Charles E. Coughlin's speech of last night before the country. He also was reported angling for assurances of a vote on the Postoffice committee's report, clearing Postmaster General Farley. If this was what he wanted, Senator Kenneth McKellar (Democrat), of Tennessee, chairman of the committee, will not stand in his way. McKellar, assured that the Senate will uphold his report, said he is ready to give Long a vote "any time he wants it."

Yesterday's White House luncheon for new Democratic Senators was the first event of its kind since Roosevelt was inaugurated. It will be followed later this week by a reception for new House Democratic members.

Delighted with their repast and the running fire of conversation with their chief, the favored Senators left the White House in high spirits.

The menu included wine, oysters, filet mignon and trimmings. The table was festively decorated with carnations, stocks and ferns. On the President's right sat Senator Theodore G. Bilbo, of Mississippi; on his left, Senator James E. Murray, of Montana.

For nearly an hour, the chatter turned on Huey, enlivened by repartee and laughter. Senator Bilbo was asked what he thought of one of the Kingfish's speeches. He said he found nothing in it to think about.

There was some serious discussion of the works bill and other legislation. Senators received the impression the President is going to insist on enactment of the Administration's holding company bill.

Guests included Senators Burke, Nebraska; Donahey, Ohio; Gerry, Rhode Island; Guffey, Pennsylvania; Holt, West Virginia; Maloney, Connecticut; Minton, Indiana; Moore, New Jersey; Radcliffe, Maryland; Schwellenbach, Washington, and Trueman, Missouri.

Senators Hear Outburst.

The luncheon, party adjourned shortly after 3 p. m. and Senators were back at the Capitol in time to hear Long's final outburst.

Galleries were crowded all day, as word went around that the "Kingfish" would speak. When his short speech concluded there was a general exodus, while the chair pounded loudly for order. The show was over.

Earlier, Senator Warren R. Austin (Republican), of Vermont, told the Senate committee changes have improved the bill and he will vote for it. Austin is one of a few Senators said to have switched their stand on the prevailing wage scale. He now is expected to vote against that scale.

Ascent at End In Food Prices, AAA Says Now

Slight Gain in Latter Half of Year Only Rise, Decides Bean.

By the Associated Press.

An about-face in the AAA's prediction fo rising food prices came yesterday as Louis H. Bean, economic advisor to the administration, declared that they had about reached the ceiling.

On February 27 Bean prepared a study used by Secretary Wallace in forecasting a rise of 11 per cent in food prices during the first half of 1935 compared with the last six months of 1934. He added that an additional 1 per cent increase would occur during the latter half of the year.

Bean said yesterday, however, that the present level of between 7 and 8 per cent above the level of the last half of 1934 was probably the limit.

Prospective seasonal increases in production of milk, eggs, and similar products and imports of food when prices reach a point where products can be brought in over tariff barriers will maintain the status quo, he declared.

Asked if he still expected a further rise during the latter half of the year because of other drought or insect damage, Bean declared it is still too early to estimate the effects of such factors.

Vice Probers Sent Threats By N. Y. Gangs

Detective, Prosecutor and Grand Jurors Menaced as Drive Continues.

By the Associated Press.

New York, March 11.—Underworld retaliation threats menaced four vice and gambling racket probers tonight as the March grand jury returned its first indictments, naming three persons.

"You punk," a gruff-voiced man warned Detective Harry Lichtblau by telephone. "You and Wahl have 72 hours to live." Wahl is Assistant District Attorney Maurice G. Wahl, who today summoned four women taken in a raid on a notorious establishment kept by Polly Adler.

Detective Lichtblau is assigned to the district attorney's office.

Grand Jurors Get Warning.

Two of the grand jurors, Foreman Lee Thompson Smith and Frank F. Herod, were warned in mailed threats to "vote right on the policy indictments."

The message, police said, was signed "Sam Greenberg."

"It will be in the interest of your physical and mental welfare and that of your family to vote the right way on the policy indictments," the notes stated.

The three persons named in the indictments were charged with conspiracy in connection with the vice inquiry, and two also were additionally charged with subornation of perjury.

District Attorney William C. Dodge also summoned the Adler woman to appear for questioning by him, Wahl and Police Commissioner Valentine.

91 Arrests Over Week-End.

Ninety-one arrests were listed for the week-end after raids on policy-player hangouts. Petty players held were so numerous they had to be placed in the felony pens at the Tombs.

Two witnesses were guarded against possible gangland reprisals. One, a girl of 19, charges she was held captive for a month by a Brooklyn white slave syndicate.

The other, Anna Galasso, supplied a $1,500 bond to release her brother, Charles, arrested for selling policy slips outside Tombs Prison.

Lafoon National Committeeman.

Frankfort, Ky., March 11 (AP).—Gov. Ruby Lafoon was elected Kentucky Democratic national committeeman today to succeed the late State Senator Allie W. Young, of Morehead. The Governor told the Democratic State central executive committee that he would support President Roosevelt and the New Deal measures.

The Post Wins Sole Right Here To Comic Strips

Appeals Court Injunction Prevents Publication by Times and Herald.

By a decision of the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, handed down yesterday, The Washington Post is granted an injunction restraining the Washington Times Co. from publishing in the Washington Herald or the Washington Times the four comic strips known as "The Gumps," "Dick Tracy," "Gasoline Alley," and "Winnie Winkle," as well as feature articles by Westbrook Pegler and Dr. Evans.

Chief Justice Martin and Associate Justices Robb, Hitz, and Van Orsdel in a decision written by the latter, with Associate Justice Groner dissenting, reversed the lower court decision of Justice Bailey, of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia. Thereby The Washington Post's exclusive right to publish in Washington these comics and features, furnished under contract with the Tribune Co., of Chicago, is confirmed.

This contract was among the assets acquired by The Washington Post in the receivership sale confirmed by the court on June 12, 1933. The next day, however, The Washington Times Co., whose representative had been present at the receivership sale, closed a contract with the Tribune syndicate to supply these comics and features to it, irrespective of The Post's contract for exclusive publication in Washington.

Suit Filed by The Post.

Thereupon The Post filed a suit in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia asking the court to enjoin The Washington Times Co. from publishing these comics and features, and obtained a temporary restraining order. This order was dissolved by the court on July 14, but on July 31 Justice Luhring, on application of The Post, granted a preliminary injunction pending final hearing of the case. Justice Bailey, before whom the case was heard, decided that The Post was not entitled to an injunction and dismissed the suit. The decision yesterday by the Court of Appeals reversed this finding of the lower court.

The Post also had filed in the Supreme Court of New York for specific performance of the contract, and a preliminary injunction was obtained. Subsequently, the case was tried on its merits before the Supreme Court of New York, which held that the contract was assignable and had passed to The Post at the receiver's sale, and hence that The Post was entitled to a decree for specific performance of the contract.

"We agree with the hoding of the New York court that the contract in the present case was assignable," said the United States Court of Appeals in its decision yesterday. Continuing, the Court of Appeals said: "The facts disclosed by the record in this case clearly establish the transfer of the contract as a part of the receivership sale."

Reference to Damages.

With reference to damages the court stated that "the damage here that would be sustained by the appellant company (The Post) is irreparable and irremediable if continued, and the law furnishes neither a complete nor an adequate remedy. In such cases injunction will lie to restrain a third party from interfering with existing contract relations."

"The dismissal of the petition for an injunction in this case," added the court, "left both plaintiff and defendant publishing the comics in their respective papers; plaintiff is acting under protection of the decree for specific performance entered by the New York court, and defendant company is operating under its contract. An injunction decree to restrain defendant company from further operating under its contract with the Tribune Co. will leave in full force the decree of the New York court requiring the Tribune Co. to perform its contract with appellant company.

"The decree is reversed with costs, and the cause is remanded for further proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion."

Accordingly, by the decree in the New York case, the Tribune syndicate is required to continue furnishing the four comics and the two feature articles to The Post, while under the decision yesterday of the Court of Appeals The Post is entitled to an injunction restraining publication of the comics and features in the Herald or the Times.

Roosevelt Trip Is Threatened

Works Impasse Likely to Delay or Prevent Fishing Cruise.

The continued deadlock in Congress was seen yesterday as constituting a definite threat to President Roosevelt's plans for a two weeks' fishing cruise off the coast of Florida.

Under tentative arrangements, the President is to leave at the end of next week to board the yacht Nourmahal, now awaiting him at Miami.

The longer the deadlock continues over the $4,880,000,000 works bill, however, the shorter his chances become for getting off at this season for the annual trip he prizes so much.

White House officials said plans have not been changed, but a growing uneasiness was evident that Mr. Roosevelt might have to forego, or postpone, his fishing.

Wagner Labor Bill Before Senate Group

Enemy Ranks Grow as NRA Fights for Life

Attacks Continue on Senate Floor and at Committee Hearing.

hearing all sides of the question," King added.

He asked that an attorney be employed to question witnesses and that an investigator be employed. Chairman Harrison said a man would be hired to coordinate and arrange tsetimony. He said the present program was merely an approach to the subject.

King's suggestion followed announcement by Harrison that the following witnesses would be called in the order named:

S. Clay Williams, who is retiring as chairman of the recovery board; Sidney Hillman, a member of the board; Leon Henderson, head of the NRA research and planning division; Francis Biddle, chairman of the National Labor Relations Board; Clarence Darrow, who made an investigation of NRA last year, and Lowell Mason, who assisted Darrow. Richberg, however, probably will be on the stand for several days.

Discussing complaints, Richberg said that $2,245,000 in wage restitutions had been made through NRA field offices and $732,000 through code authorities.

Shows Employment Gain.

Richberg then introduced an exhibit showing increase in employment in 62 specified industries since inauguration of NRA. Senator Hastings (Republican), of Delaware, adding up the Richberg figures, showed that at the high mark under NRA, coming at various periods in various industries, 7,089,000 persons had been employed in these industries, while in December and January only 5,975,000 were employed.

Richberg replied that employment for a particular month did not indicate employment for the year. Discussing unemployment figures, he said that many of them were misleading because they did not indicate part-time employment. He said, for example, a man normally employed for eight months of the year would be counted as unemployed during the remaining four.

"I object to continual misunderstanding throughout the country on the subject of unemployment," Richberg said.

He declared all unemployment figures are "subject to interpretation."

Quizzed on NRA Cost.

Closely questioned on the cost of NRA, Richberg estimated that its administration costs industry $41,000,000 a year. This led to the question of whether code authorities had a right to assess members of industry for administration costs. Richberg replied that assessments were voluntary and added that he doubted the legality of code authorities "taxing" industries against their will.

Senator Byrd (Democrat), Virginia, wanted to know why unemployment figures were a million above the 9,000,000 estimated in May, 1934. Richberg repeated that such figures were subject to interpretation.

Much of the opposition to NRA came from Senators who insisted that it worked to the advantage of big business and to the detriment of the little business man.

King wanted to know whether the codes were not written by a few representatives of the large concerns in various industries. Richberg promised to give the committee the names of persons drafting codes and the names of persons serving on code authorities.

Lumber Code Criticized.

The lumber code came in for specific criticism from Senators Byrd, Bailey (Democrat), North Carolina; Clark (Democrat), Missouri, and George (Democrat), Georgia. Bailey contended it had "chloroformed" North Carolina saw mills.

Senator La Follette (Progressive), Wisconsin, quoted an NRA report as saying that dividends last year were 50 per cent higher than in 1926 and that the country's net income was 40 per cent lower.

"So far as more equitable distribution of the national income is concerned, we haven't made the progress we hoped for," La Follette said. He asked Richberg to explain what Congress could do to help.

Richberg said large new issues of securities since 1926 and the fact that dividends and interest charges were paid out of reserves accounted for the figures quoted by La Follette.

The discussion on the Senate floor followed introduction of a bill by Senator Bankhead (Democrat), Alabama, to abolish the "Pittsburgh plus" plan of fixing steel prices. He said the practice had been allowed by the code after having been ordered abandoned by the Federal Trade Commission in 1924.

Attack by Borah.

Senator Borah attacked the code, also declaring it permitted the plan and in some instances raised the price of steel as much as 800 per cent.

Senator Lewis said the situation was not a result of the code but a result of action of individuals and that these individuals should be called before grand juries.

"When such an individual was brought before a grand jury he would plead he was acting under the law, under a code," Borah retorted.

Borah, attending the labor bill hearing, insisted there should be some "simplification" of the labor mediation set-up of NRA.

Wagner said his bill would bring about such simplifications. He explained that more than a dozen boards now have the power to interpret and enforce labor provisions. His bill would set up a permanent labor relations board, outlaw company dominated unions and would provide a majority rule in union representation.

Predicts Walkouts.

Predicting strikes if Section 7(a) of the recovery act is allowed to languish, Wagner added:

"On the other hand, if we clarify that law and bolster it by adequate enforcement agencies, we shall do much to round out the program for a balanced economic system founded upon fair dealing and common business sense."

Wagner denied his measure would outlaw the company union "if by that term is meant solely the free and independent organization of workers who desire to confine their cooperative actions to a single company."

Borah questioned the constitutionality of the Wagner bill in the light of recent court decisions. Wagner replied the courts recognized the right of the Government to regulate employment in business affecting interstate commerce.

'Angostura Morgan' Reports on Bitters

By the Associated Press.

New York, March 11.—Frank Morgan, stage and screen star, made his first annual report today as vice-president of the Angostura-Wuppermann Corporation, makers of Angostura bitters.

Morgan's 83-year-old mother, Mrs. J. W. Wuppermann, presided as usual at the annual meeting of stockholders and directors, but her son, whom she induced last year to enter the family business as head of the company's affairs on the West Coast, stole the show.

He reported Western business in bitters running well ahead of last year. Morgan said that since he entered the bitters business his friends on the coast call him "Angostura Morgan." But he doesn't mind that.

'True Bill' Returned Against J. A. Smith

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Woodstock, Va., March 11.—Following a 45-minute deliberation a Shenandoah County grand jury found a "true bill" against James A. Smith, 67, alleged slayer of Peter J. Cook, Powells Fort Valley farmer.

The killing is alleged to have taken place when Smith was attacked by Cook and his son, Lewis Cook, in a private roadway that divides the Smith and Cook farms. An old discarded lard can that was thrown on the Smith land by Cook is the cause of the fight in which Cook was slain, it is said.

According to Smith, Cook struck him in the head with a stone, cutting a deep gash over the left eye, before he fired. Self-defense will be the plea entered in Smith's behalf, as he was in poor health and under doctor's care at the time of the slaying.

According to witnesses the shooting was a sequel to a long feud that has existed between the two men. The trial that is slated for Wednesday marks the first murder trial docketed in the Shenandoah County court for over five years. Smith is to be represented by F. H. Brumback and Gilbert E. Pence, Woodstock attorneys.

Gets 18 Years in Slaying.

Stuart, Va., March 11 (AP).—A sentence of eighteen years imprisonment was imposed on Johnny Balisle by a jury in Patrick County Circuit Court, which late today convicted him of second-degree murder for his alleged part in the killing of John Kendrick, Patrick County sawmill owner who died at a hospital here in December after he had been struck on the head and then badly burned.

ress must be surrendered into the hands of professional politicians?"

"Someone, irrespective of his Catholicity, or of his Protestantism, or of his Jewish faith," said Father Coughlin, "was required to raise his voice, if for no other reason than to condemn those who, refusing to leave this land of sorrow, obstructed our passage to the land of prosperity."

In defending his Sunday afternoon speeches on matters of government and finance as a "common duty," Father Coughlin said:

"I regret sincerely that a man who once held such a high office in our Nation, either ignorantly or maliciously has called into question this fundamental principle of citizenship."

Rights as Citizen.

Declaring that the Constitution contained nothing to disbar any citizen from engaging in the activities of a citizen, Father Coughlin declared:

"I am compelled to rehearse this plain truth for your consideration because a demagogic utterance by appealing to thoughtlessness, to religion and to professional bigotry has questioned it.

"The money changers whom the priest drove from the Temple of Jerusalem, both by word and by physical force, have marshalled their forces behind the leadership of a chocolate soldier for the purpose of driving the priest out of public affairs."

Hailing the tenets of social justice as the only way "to secure economic liberty for our people," Father Coughlin said:

Concentration of Wealth.

"So well is this truth known that the concentrators of wealth are resorting to the musty methods, long since in disrepute, to preserve America fo rthe plutocrats and to retain its quarreling divided citizenship for their own exploitation. * * * our program can be accomplished peacefully through national solidarity. * * *"

Recalling Johnson's reference to "cry babies" amon gthe populace, Father Coughlin said "the 80,000,000 cry babies to whom Gen. Johnson referred have not concentrated our wealth, * * * for the destruction of small industry, nor did they force 22,000,000 hungry men and women to stand in bread lines * * *.

"I am characterized as a revolutionary for raising my voice against these palpable injustices while the blind Bourbons cannot see the writing on the wall nor read the pages of history written in Crimson by pens which were dipped into the bleeding hearts at Concord, Lexington and Valley Forge."

15 Army Planes Seek Missing Student Flier

Selfridge Field, Mount Clemens, Mich., March 11 (AP).—Fifteen Army Air Corps planes traveled the airways between this Air Corps base and Cleveland today without finding a trace of Milton A. Lampl, a cadet flyer missing since he took off from the Ohio city Sunday night on a return flight to Selfridge Field.

A dense fog covered the southeastern corner of Michigan last night and it was feared that Lampl might have lost his bearings and gotten over Lake Erie. His plane was not equipped for a water landing.

Ickes Concedes Moses Victory In Job Conflict

Attack on New Yorker Withdrawn Under Mysterious Circumstances.

the order had been "construed" so that Moses might stay on. The the political storm continued.

Last Friday at his press conference, President Roosevelt dropped a hint that Ickes might have something to say about the Moses case this week. Newspapermen rushed to Ickes' office.

Smilingly, the PWA administrator asserted that Mr. Roosevelt was just trying to "alibi for himself." Order 129, he said, "stands like the Rock of Gibraltar."

Circumstances Surprising.

Similarly, after former Gov. Alfred E. Smith championed Moses a week ago, Ickes replied that Smith seemed to consider Moses the only suitable perso nin New York for parks commissioner or membership on the bridge authority.

In fact, twice since the order was made public, Ickes had insisted that the "next move is up to Moses." Publicly this attitude was maintained even after his letter to La Guardia.

The circumstances under which the order was declared modified yesterday were as unexpected as its first appearance. The order was dated December 29. In January Ickes was asked at a press conference if it existed. He did not at the time answer directly. But after the conference the order was "discovered" by his press representative.

Subsequently, LaGuardia had made frequent calls for PWA money and had drawn up a new billion-dollar program, one-fourth of the total the President asked for the entire country.

Perhaps by a coincidence, condemnation proceedings were filed yesterday for a $12,500,000 PWA slum clearance project at Williamsburg, N. Y.

Devoted Only a Postscrip.

Ironically, in his lette rto Ickes, dated February 23 and made public yesterday, La Guardia had stated his case for mosts only in a postscript. Tht burden of his letter was that the term of Tenement Commissioner Langdon W. Post as chairman of the municipal housing authority had expired and he wanted to know whether Post might be reappointed.

"A similar situatoin in the city covered by order No. 128," ran the postscrip, "is that of Robert Moses, who is a member of the tri-borough authority and parks commissioner of the City of New York. I assume the ruling on one will be applicable to the other."

Ickes carried out a similar maneuver, first asserting that Post might be retained, and adding:

"Since a like situation exists with reference to Mr. Moses, this interpretation shall also apply to him."

Ickes and La Guardia agreed that the order would apply to future PWA projects. The PWA administrator added that he would continue to supervise bridge expenditures.

Cotton Prices Crash; 'Doubt' In AAA Blamed

Loan Uncertainty Cited on New York Exchange; Stocks Drop Also.

By the Associated Press.

New York, March 11.—King Cotton fell with a thud today which resounded throughout the Nation's financial markets.

Prices tumbled $7.90 to $9.35 a bale in the New York Cotton Exchange—the sharpest drop in more than 7 years—before the tide was turned. As the trading session closed, prices were still down $4.80 to $5.95 from Saturday's final level.

Cotton plunged just when Wall Street was feeling encouraged over a number of things, including announcement the Treasury's use of its $642,000,000 of "free gold" to retire the outstanding national bank notes and simplify the currency, indications of good support for the recently declining British pound, and reports of further stepping up of automobile production.

Uncertainity Held Responsible.

Moderate gains in securities prices were quickly lost. Stocks closed with declines of $1 to $3 in several leading issues, which depressed average price levels to new lows for 1935, not far above the bottom reached in 1934. Selling also spread to bonds, with lower-priced rails breaking sharply. Virtually all groups declined, with U. S. Government issues ending the day moderately lower.

The slump in cotton quickly pulled down other leading speculative staples. Wheat closed in Chicago with losses of 1½ to 2 cents a bushel, about a cent above the day's lowest prices, and corn finished 1½ to 2¼ cents lower. Cottonseed oil, hides, rubber and several other staples declined in the New York futures markets.

The cotton market suddenly gave way, brokers said, under the cumulative weight of increasing uncertainty over the Government's crop and loan policies. The break quickly brought reassuring statements from Washington, however, which helped the partial recovery.

The fiber had been drifting lower in price for weeks, and at today's low of 10¼ cents a pound for the May delivery, was down more than 3 cents from the prices of last August. The decline gathered momentum last week, and today reached a point where stop-loss selling orders were touched off like a string of fire crackers.

AAA Administrator Davis said in Washington that no change was planned in the loan and adjustment program, and Chairman Smith of the Senate Agricultural Committee said he would propose impounding the 5,500,000 bales which the Government has in equity, to remove its pressure from the markets.

The slump in farm staple prices had one favorable aspect, commission houses noted, and that was that it came at a time when farmers are not holding much for sale. Nevertheless, it prompted considerable selling of shares in companies dependent upon farm purchasing power.

Wall street could trace no connection between the drop in staples and the Treasury's announcement that it was using its $642,000,000 of free gold to retire the national bank notes.

Pound Recovers.

The conservatives liked the idea of using the gold in a manner which would not immediately increase currency in circulation or boost excess bank reserves further, while at the same time reducing the national debt. The retirement of the national bank notes is to be accomplished by calling the Government bonds which are deposited with the Treasury as backing for them.

The slump in the pound sterling during the last fortnight had been regarded as potentially a serious threat to American staple price levels, but today the pound recovered somewhat. It dipped a little in the late dealings in New York, but finished three-quarters of a cent above Saturday's final level at $4.76¾. In turn, however, the European gold currencies weakened.

A possible contributing factor to the decline in the securities market was the announcement by the American Iron and Steel Institute early in the afternoon that its reports indicated steel production this week would be at only 47.1 per cent of capacity, a decline of 1.1 percentage points from last week, although still above the like week of last year, when the rate was 46.5 per cent.

By the Associated Press.

New Orleans, March 11.—A determined selling movement that at one time threatened to demoralize the exchang pushed cotton futures down more than $9 a bale today, but a technical rally in the closing hours checked the decline and active positions closed from $5 to $5.75 a bale lower.

It was one of the most active sessions in years, and as brokers stood and shouted orders across the ring for the entire five hours of dealings it recalled the tempestuous days of the '29 bull market.

The spot market reflected the weakness in futures and middling at New Orleans was off 106 points, at 11.28 cents a pound.

As the downward trend began to gather momentum in the second hour, active contracts dropped 5 to 10 points on each transaction, with the 12-cent loan level guaranteed by the Government being shattered by all contracts.

Just before mid-day the May position was within 50 cents a bale of the $10 price swing allowed by the exchange, and for a time it appeared that dealings would be suspended in this position. But after touching 10.23, short covering and profit taking halted the decline and the afternoon rally got under way.

Prices hovered around the 11-cent level until the final gong, May closing at 11.09; July, at 11.12; October, at 10.83, and December, at 10.85.

Divergent views were expressed over today's flood of liquidation, but the general belief was that tired long interests, uncertain over whether there will be any loan on next year's crop, decided to throw their holdings overboard.

Swanson Appears Before House Committee

Swanson Explains Case

The text of Secretary Swanson's statement to the House Appropriations Sub-committee, read by an aid, yesterday, follows:

I appear here at your invitation to explain to you my attitude which has been widely discussed in the press recently in regard to controversial matters arising between the General Accounting Office and the Navy Department.

In the very outset I want to explain to you that all the correspondence between the Navy Department and the Attorney General's office related solely to the travel allowances of dependents of officers ordered home to await retirement and to nothing else. Further, I desire to admit that my letter of January 30, 1935, addressed to the Comptroller General appears broad and to comprehend other differences of opinion unless the inclosure sent therewith is considered in connection with the letter.

The inclosure, which is a letter from the Attorney General to the Secretary of the Navy, dated January 15, 1935, says "accordingly, I must advise you that you should accept the above cited opinion of the Attorney General and decisions of the Court of Claims as controlling in the administration of the statute and instruct your subordinate accordingly."

The status which was discussed was the status authorizing travel allowances to the dependents of officers ordered to make a permanent change of station, so, therefore, the advice of the Attorney General only referred to this one statute.

Denies a General Defiance.

In my letter to the Comptroller General, I enclosed as a matter of interest to the general accounting office a copy of the Attorney General's opinion dated January 15 and I further stated "I have this day directed that the Attorney General's opinion and decisions of the Court of Claims be hereafter followed and that appropriate changes in existing naval instructions be made accordingly."

I referred only to the one question, namely, travel allowance of the dependants of officers ordered home to await retirement, and the instructions given related only to this one question.

I made this explanation to show you that my letter to the Comptroller General was not a general "defi" as it has been characterized by the press and understood apparently as such by many members of Congress.

The present question has been arising periodically for many years. The only statute in existence in connection with the travel allowances of dependents of officers ordered to make a permanent change of station is section 12 of the act of May 18, 190, 41 Stat. 604, as amended by section 12 of the act of June 10, 1922, 42 Stat. 631. Since the passage of these acts the Navy Department has always contended that when any officer of the Navy or the Marine Corps was ordered home to await retirement that this constituted a permanent change of station within the meaning of the statute and that the dependents were entitled to travel allowances. The Comptroller General has on each occasion ruled to the contrary. Many cases have been brought before the Court of Claims for adjudication. At least one, the Bullard vs. U. S. 66 Ct. Cls. 264, related to an officer so ordered home from a point without the United States and several other cases have been considered where the officer was within the United States when ordered home to await retirement.

Expenses Are Upheld.

In all of these cases the Court of Claims has decided in favor of the officer and in no case to my knowledge have they given a decision contrary to the officer.

Recently it has been the practice of the Comptroller General's office to allow these travel allowances to officers ordered home from without the United States, but to refuse them to officers ordered home within the United States.

There is only one statute governing this question, so it is impossible to understand how the General Accounting Office could allow these travel allowances to dependents of officers in one category and refuse them to officers in another category, both categories being ordered home to await orders for retirement.

In the Comptroller General's recent letter of February 27 he states that hereafter, although he has passed these allowances to officers without the United States, ordered home to await retirement, he will no longer even do this; this change in attitude, he states, is on account of what he terms my announced conclusion to ignore the decisions of his office with respect to the legal availability of existing appropriations.

Of course, as I explained above, his understanding of my letter is incorrect, as this letter only was intended to refer to this one subject. If these payments were legal in the past I do not understand why they are not equally legal in the future, or why the Comptroller General should refuse to allow legal payments simply because he does not like my attitude in this matter.

Sees Authority as Ample.

I think the act of 1921, known as the budget and accounting act, is sufficient within itself, and that no modification is necessary; that the authority and powers of the Comptroller General are amply defined therein. Further, I do not believe that any limitation in the apropriations act are either necessary or desirable. Up to the time of the receipt of the Comptroller General's letter, it was thought that the Navy Department's cooperation with the General Accounting Office was as complete and harmonious as it could be. However, no cooperation can ever bring a unanimity of opinion on all matters between the two offices, and furthermore, I believe that disagreement is wholesome when it does not interfere with the conduct of governmental business.

In this matter the Navy Department in its contention has been supported by Attorney General Stone in 1924 and Attorney General Cummings and by at least eleven decisions of the Court of Claims and it appears unnecessary that there should be further litigation regarding the identical question. All officers within the United States being ordered home for retirement are being refused travel allowances for their dependents by the Comptroller General; they are forced to go to great expense to take their claims before the court—the Government is placed to great expense in defending these suits, yet, all that I know of so far have been approved by the courts, so why should the Comptroller General refuse to acknowledge the opinion of the two Attorneys General, supported by at least 11 decisions of the Court of Claims interpreting the statute in question.

You gentlemen desire to know why I have taken this attitude, notwithstanding the holding of the Comptroller General. I refer you to the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Miguel vs. McCarl, Comptroller General, et al., 291, U. S. 442 (Syllabus) "A duty to pay, plainly imposed by the statutes, cannot be affected by a contrary decision of the Comptroller General." It is my opinion that in these cases that the duty of the disbursing officers to pay travel allowances of dependents of officers ordered home to wait retirement is plainly prescribed after the interpretation of the statute by the opinions of the Attorney General and at least 11 decisions of the Court of Claims and that if I did not direct disbursing officers to so pay, even though the Comptroller General ruled to the contrary, that I would be neglecting my duty.

committee, objected to McLeod's line of questioning. McLeod persisted, with the support of Ditter. Swanson answered all questions without protest. A transcript of his executive session testimony will be made public later.

It was learned, however, that Swanson declared he thought the Comptroller General's office was "doing a good job in many respects." The Secretary recalled that while a member of Congress he voted for the bill from which McCarl's authority flows.

Ditter asked Swanson whether he could cite any "substantive law" which empowered him to follow rulings of the Court of Claims in preference to those of the Comptroller General, and received a negative reply.

The Pennsylvanian asked whether the Government vigorously prosecuted the claims which it ultimately lost in the court cases involved. He suggested some of the 11 suits might have been "pro confeso cases. Swanson said he did not know.

Later Ditter charged the real issue was whether any Cabinet officer could absolutely disregard McCarl's ruling.

"If that's the case," he said, "we might as well dissolve the Comptroller General's office."

Cary later disclosed he hoped to amend existing law to specifically permit transportation expenses for dependents. He remarked Swanson's letter to McCarl was "unfortunately phrased," and inaccurately gave the impression that the department would be "cut loose entirely" from decisions by the Comptroller General.

The department, Cary said, will be guided only by the Court of Claims in cases involving transportation of dependents.

conjecture that Panama's claim for payment of the $250,000 annual rental for the territory covered by the Panama Canal in gold was being discussed. This obligation is provided for in a treaty between the two countries. Panama has twice refused payment of the rental by check, insisting on gold.

But this could not be confirmed. Nor was there confirmation that withdrawal of the privilege to sue under the gold clause was the topic of discussion. One official said a monetary problem was discussed; another said no new immediate policy was being contemplated and a third that there was "no need for anyone to get jumpy."

On the record Secretary Morgenthau said it was "a legal question" and referred all inquiries to Mr. Cummings. The latter suggested that inquiries be made at the White House. Stephen T. Early, assistant secretary to the President, after consulting his chief, said there was nothing to be said further than what Mr. Morgenthau had said.

Meanwhile the Treasury's weekend announcement that $675,000,000 of 2 per cent Consols and Panama Canal bonds would be retired out of the gold profit fund, with abolition of national bank currency, brought a favorable response in financial circles. Mr. Morgenthau said he had received only laudatory messages on the matter.

The only word of criticism came from Senator Huey P. Long (Democrat), of Louisiana, who asserted in the Senate that the financial operation was responsible for a break of $7 to $8 a bale in cotton prices, with a sympathetic decline in stocks and other commodities.

He was immediately challenged by colleagues to explain any connection with the bond retirement operation and the break in cotton prices. The "Kingfish" said he was repeating conversation he had heard in the cloakroom.

Reports from New York attributed the cotton price decline to rumors that the Government planned to withdraw its cotton loans. This was denied by Chester C. Davis, AAA administrator. The break in cotton prices, however, was one of the sharpest in years, with the market righting itself after the Davis denial and closing $4.80 to $5.95 a bale lower.

The Treasury announced that almost $15,000,000 of "baby bonds" had been sold in the first 8 days of the sale.

Presents Bond at Treasury.

Prior to filing his suit in the name of the Dixie Terminal Co. of Cincinnati, Ohio, of which he is president and counsel, Mr. Taft personally went to the Treasury with a $50 Fourth 4¼ per cent Liberty bond, which was called for redemption on April 15, 1934.

He first presented to the clerk at the bond coupon window three coupons taken from the bond and calling for semiannual interest on it as of April 15, 1933; October 15, 1933, and April 15, 1934. He demanded that these coupons be redeemed in gold coin of 25.8 grains nine-tenths fine to the dollar, or its equivalent in other currency, as provided for in his bond.

Mr. Taft's request for gold was refused but the clerk offered to pay legal tender for the coupons, which the Cincinnati lawyer refused. Mr. Taft then presented his bond, asking for payment in gold or its equivalent on the basis of the value of the old gold dollar. Again he was offered legal tender in the amount of the bond and this he refused.

The lawyer then presented an interest coupon dated October 15, 1934, for $1.07 semiannual interest. He asked that he be paid that sum in either gold or legal tender. This the clerk refused, pointing out that the bonds had been called as of April 15, 1934, and that notice had been given interest on it would cease after that date.

Later Appears in Court.

Mr. Taft then left, later appearing in the Court of Claims with a petition setting forth all these facts. He further pointed out to the court that the resolution of June 1933, abrogating all gold-clause contracts was "beyond the power of Congress to adopt and was unconstitutional and void"—using the language of the Supreme Court—as it related to Government securities.

Consequently, Mr. Taft argued, the Government "had no right to call said bond for redemption except on payment of 50 gold dollars each containing 25.8 grains of gold 9/10 fine" and that the action of "tendering to plaintiff $50 in legal tender currency did not constitute redemption of said bond and that the obligations of said bond are still in full force and effect."

He argued that by breaching its contract through refusal to pay him in gold the Government "forfeited, while such repudiation continues, any rights or privileges conferred on it by the terms of said bonds, including the right or privilege to redeem the said bonds before the maturity thereof."

The bond in question matures in 1938, but the right to call it for redemption in or after 1933 was reserved by the Government.

Mr. Taft made an allegation of damages suffered by him, pointing out that if his bond is "redeemable in legal tender or in gold dollars of the present standard of value (15.521 grains nine-tenths fine), said bond will be of less value to him than if it is redeemed in gold dollars of the standard of value formerly existing or if it is irredeemable before its maturity date October 15, 1938."

He pointed out that United States obligations due in three years and seven months are now selling to yield 1¼ per cent and he contended that if such obligations paid a rate of 4¼ per cent as did his bond, they would sell at 110.5 per cent of par. But bonds with that interest rate called for a redemption at par are not worth more than par at the date of redemption, he asserted.

"Whereupon the plaintiff prays judgment of $1.07, the face amount of aforesaid coupon," his petition concluded.

Supreme Court Justice Is Told to Stop Attacks Upon Archbishop.

By the Associated Press.

Berlin, March 11.—Germany's Protestant Church fight reached a new and dramatic climax today when orders were served upon Supreme Court Justice Wilhelm Flor to discontinue his addresses to meetings of the Confessional Synod.

This synod, opposed to the Nazi movement to unify the church, denounced the Nazi religious attitude in a scathing manifesto read from many pulpits yesterday.

Had Assailed Mueller.

The ban upon Flor came simultaneously with efforts throughout Prussia to suppress the manifesto, and was taken in opposition ranks as an indication that measures are under consideration for crushing the opposition.

Flor has been traveling up and down the country assailing the regime of Reichsbishop Ludwig Mueller, encharged with carrying through the Nazi church program, as illegal and unconstitutional.

The fact that the chief justice gave Flor leave of absence for his lectures was taken as an indication the supreme court in its majority agrees with Flor's stand in the church fight.

Proposed Church Cabinet.

The Confessional Synod had planned to make Flor their legal member of the church cabinet, proposed by them in case the government is ready to recognize the opposition as the true Evangelical Church, which it claims to be.

Mueller suffered a defeat in a Berlin court today when he tried to obtain an injunction against the Confessional Synod's calling itself "the provisional government of the Evangelical Church." The court refused to grant the injunction and Mueller must pay the costs of litigation.

Loyalists Rout Rebel Forces In Macedonia

rendered himself to Bulgarian authorities.

There were even reports here that the retreating rebels had strewn flowers in the path of the advancing victorious government troops. The official government casualty list in the "grand push" was given as two dead and four wounded on the government side.

Premier Payayoti Tsaldaris, indicating the rapid disintegration of rebel defenses in er battled Macedonia, issued a statement that as soon as the rebel evacuation of Drama was confirmed the Macedonia rebellion would be over, adding that the authority of the lawful government would be quickly re-established in all the islands of Greece.

Loyalists Take Seres.

Gen. Condylis, the war minister who took the field in Macedonia, wired the war department from Seres:

"We entered Seres at 9 o'clock. Rebel officers fled after robbing the Bank of Greece's local agency. They are now at Kavala, from where I am informed they will sail on rebel ships. I am sending garrisons to occupy Drama, Kavala, Xanthe and Alexandropolis."

The government announced 3,000 rebel soldiers had been captured during the operations in Macedonia.

The naval ministry said the crew of the Helle at 4:20 a. m. had placed themselves under government orders after all officers on the active list had abandoned ship. (The government quoted the crew as saying it had thrown the rebel officers overboard.) The ministry ordered the vessel to proceed to the Gulf of Salonika.

The government declared that Gen. Kamanos, the rebel leader, had been overtaken and arrested while heading for the Bulgarian border. It was announced he had sent frantic radiograms to Crete asking reinforcements from Venizelos, but that his pleas have been ignored.

Greek Legation Reports Seres Taken by Loyalists

The Greek Legation here yesterday denied any alarming reports concerning the situation at the front, as well as the internal conditions in Greece. Credence should be given only to official communications issued by the Greek Legation, it was stated.

According to reports to the legation, loyal cavalry occupied the town of Seres yesterday and the rebel cruiser Helle was abandoned by her officers and is proceeding to Salonica, where she will be surrendered by her crew.

Greek Vessel Ordered From Egyptian Port

By the Associated Press.

Alexandria, Egypt, March 11.—The Greek vessel Kerkyra, which arrived here from Crete this morning, reportedly to obtain provisions for the rebel fleet, was ordered away by the authorities tonight without troubling to discover the identity of those on board.

It had been reported that Admiral Colialexis, commander of the cruiser Avero, flagship of the rebel fleet, was aboard disguised as an ordinary seaman.

A member of the Kerkyra's crew said the vessel had arrived from Suda Bay, Crete, and was approached while there by the cruiser Averoff. He added that two Greek airplanes had dropped bombs at that time, killing two rebel sailors.

This man said that a uniformed man boarded the Kerkyra accompanied by a bodyguard of five armed men, while he was called Georges Kallenski, the belief spread that he was Admiral Colialexis.

15 Americans Held As 'Prisoners of War'

By Ben Ames.

Copyright, 1935, by the United Press.

Seres, Macedonia, March 11.—For more than a week, 15 American citizens have been bottled up in the town of Seres, spearhead of the rebel position, practically prisoners of war.

Today I interviewed a former American colonel, J. Judge, of New York, who described the plight of Americans prior to the evacuation of the rebels.

I went in with the victorious Athens troops at 9 a. m., after witnessing from the heights the reduction of the last strong position held by the weak rebel artillery.

Col. Judge said all Americans had been cautioned—almost commanded—to remain within their houses throughout the expected bombardment.

The entire city was dominated by the rebels, who appeared to have complete command of the situation. The Americans were completely cut off from the world. No personal or business messages, either to friends, relatives or business houses, were permitted to leave the city.

"We would like to assure our friends of our safety," some of them suggested.

"It is impossible," was the only reply.

Mrs. Waters Appointed By Farm Cooperative

Mrs. Bowie F. Waters, Germantown, Md., was elected secretary-treasurer of the Montgomery Farm Women's Cooperative Market, at a meeting of the directors at Rockville yesterday. The resignation of Mrs. Louise Mindeleff, manager, was accepted. The appointment of her successor was deferred.

Legislation affecting the poultry industry, and now pending before the Maryland General Assembly, was discussed, and the group voted to petition State Senator Stedman Prescott to support both bills. One bill prohibits the labeling of cold storage eggs as fresh eggs. The other prohibits the use of eggs found to be infertile in incubators for making of powdered eggs for human consumption.

Rebel Leaders Flee to Bulgaria And Surrender as Cause Fails

Hundreds of Insurgents Face Court-Martial, With Grave Consequences Feared as Aftermath of War; Powers Expected to Counsel Mercy.

By James A. Mills.

Copyright, 1935, by the Associated Press.

Salonika, Greece, March 11.—Hopelessly outnumbered by government forces, Gen. George Kamanos and 18 rebel staff officers in command of the Macedonian campaign fled to Bulgaria today and surrendered to military authorities of that country, bringing the revolution on the Greek mainland to an end after 11 days.

Kamanos surrendered at Petritian, former headquarters of the notorious Macedonian terrorist, Ivan Mihailoff, now believed to be in Turkey.

Helpless and hopeless, several thousand of ragged, half-famished rebel soldiers are in flight toward Thrace.

This dramatic denouement to the swift-moving Greek drama on land came simultaneously with the surrender at sea of one of the rebels' principal battleships, the cruiser Helle, which is en route to Salonika with a white flag flying from a mast under guard of government airplanes.

Rebels Face Court-Martial.

What the aftermath of the revolution may be even the Greeks themselves shrink from contemplating. Court-martial undoubtedly faces hundreds of rebel officers of the army and navy, and the firing squad is a possible penalty.

Former Premier Venizelos himself, whom the government regards as the arch-culprit, probably will escape punishment for treason, it was believed here, by fleeing from Crete in an airplane or a fast boat. His probable destination was believed likely to be Italy.

In case hundreds of rebel army and navy officers are put to death, Greeks and foreigners alike fear it may provoke another revolution, this time among the Populists themselves (members of the Popular Party of Premier Tsaldaris), which would have grave consequences.

It was expected here that the great powers, especially England, will counsel the Greek government to use moderation and mercy in dealing with the insurgents in order to prevent further bloodshed.

Foreigners Now May Leave.

With the close of the revolution it was thought Americans and other foreigners now bottled up in Greece upon government orders will be allowed to leave the country.

Traveling in a broken-down American motor car over the historic and rugged highway traced by Philip of Macedon and Alexander the Great 2,500 years ago, I was the first American correspondent to reach the so-called great battle front today.

Before me, by special arrangement of the Greek government, had gone Greek newspapermen, and before them the army; and before the army, the Greek photographers.

The whole affair seemed mild in contrast with the heroic wars waged in the same region not only during the great war 20 years ago, but throughout Macedonia's 3,000 years of history.

The government-styled front is now far beyond the wide, shallow Struma River, whose icy floods hindered the advance of Gen. George Condylis, commanding government forces. The rebels were nowhere visible.

Finds General Posing.

My ramshackle automobile rumbled and tottered over the roughly planked Struma bridge which was set afire yesterday by huge shells which the rebels set off before they fled. One of the planks gave way under me, and I thought the next casualty of the "Greek Civil War" would be myself.

The second day of what the Greeks called the "grand push" of the government forces was finished with a casualty list of only two dead and four wounded on the government side. The number of dead and wounded among the insurgents was not known.

Catching up with the Greek army, which had halted temporarily, I found Gen. Condylis posing before a group of Greek photographers, while a crowd of Greek officers surrounding him were trying to get into the picture.

"Seres will be in our hands in a few hours," Condylis said. He was obviously pleased with the success of his operations. He has recently been promoted to field marshal for "valor on the field of battle."

He talked in broken French, mingled with excited Greek phrases.

"The revolution is dead," he said. "The fate of Venizelos is sealed. The Greek nation is healed."

The retreat of the rebels was so well organized and orderly that they even had time to transport their hospital cases, leaving no indication of the number of their casualties.

The government announced that the Loyalists had taken 200 prisoners. (Reports from Athens placed the number at 3,000, according to the government's estimate.)

This orderly retreat was puzzling Gen. Condylis, who has expressed some apprehension that government forces may be drawn into a trap and forced to fight rear-guard action with their backs to the swollen Struma River.

Maj. B. J. O'Leary, of the British Royal Artillery, visited the front today, where Greek is meeting Greek, and where 20 years ago the British met Bulgars and Germans. With him was a French general whose name was not disclosed.

Rebels Well Entrenched.

The rebels had retired to the old line of fortifications occupied by Bulgarians during the World War. It runs from Drama to Demirhissar around the spurs of the Balkan mountains. These old trenches have concrete shelters and powerful earthworks and are considered by military experts as almost invulnerable.

The government used all its 27 airplanes in today's operations, dropping, however, only occasional bombs which caused no casualties.

Foreign newspapermen here are at the mercy of reprisals on the part of the Greek government for alleged unfavorable reports published abroad regarding the internal situation.

Henry de la Pree, of the Petit Journal of Paris, is being held incommunicado. A distinguished aviation correspondent of the Paris "journel," Didier Poulain, was dragged off a train at Salonika, when, after having given his official passes to the police, he was charged with having presented no credentials. He was saved from imprisonment by intervention of the French consul.

D. C. Man Faces Charge Of Reckless Driving

Charles P. Simms, 23, 2022 Columbia road northwest, posted $40 collateral before Justice of the Peace A. L. Wilson, Bethesda, yesterday pending his appearance in Montgomery County Police Court, Rockville, March 15 to face charges of reckless driving and failing to stop after an accident.

Privates J. D. Briggs and Leo O. Day said they stopped Simms yesterday on Wisconsin avenue, near the District line, for reckless driving. They took his driving permit and told him to follow them to Bethesda sub-station, they said.

At Bradley lane, Simms turned left and continued at an alarming rate of speed toward Connecticut avenue, where he collided with an auto operated by Mrs. Lathe B. Rowe, Chevy Chase, Md., continued toward Chevy Chase Circle and escaped, Briggs charges. He was arrested at his home.

Parish Schools Health Checks Aim of Ruhland

New Officer for District Tells Plans in First Public Address.

Dr. George C. Ruhland, new District health officer, places health inspection in parochial schools as one of the chief goals of his administration.

The health chief set forth his immediate aims in an address before the Washington Council of Social Agencies yesterday at the Y. W. C. A., Seventeenth and K streets.

He expressed surprise that the parochial schools should operate without formal public precautions against the spread of disease, and added:

"Communicable diseases will not stay confined to these schools if they start there, but will spread to other children."

Dr. Ruhland listed four other objectives. They are:

More public health measures, solution of the tuberculosis problem, distribution of public health literature and social hygiene health service.

The address was Dr. Ruhland's first since he took over the city health service. He praised the work of the staff "in the face of financial handicap."

The public health nursing staff of the city, he said, is inadequate, with scarcely 100 in the ranks. The total should be increased to one for every 2,000 population, he stated.

who had urgent business left their homes. The capital was almost like a ghost city.

The mysterious murders in the capital went unsolved. Some of the bodies had not been identified. One of the bodies found in a street was that of Enrique Fernandez, former secretary of the interior in the fallen government of Dr. Grau San Martin and one of the leading figures in the Autentico party.

Another body was that of Juan Maria Munoz, a former soldier. The man who died in the hospital was Miguel Aracil.

There was little actual disorder in the capital during the day. An unidentified group looted the premises of the weekly magazine, Tangana. Although railroad men were on strike, soldiers forced a crew at Camaguey to bring a train into Havana. A bomb was exploded in the fiscal zone building at Camaguey. Small bomb explosions were heard here.

Soldiers found three bombs under a bridge near Santiago and exploded them with rifle fire, damaging the bridge.

The presidential decree of a "state of war" was in line with drastic measures promised by the government to quench incipient revolution. The decree provides for trial of arrested persons in councils of war and prohibits all persons from appearing on the streets at night without a special military pass.

It gives the military powers almost unlimited authority, but is not officially described as a military dictatorship.

The decree was first employed by a man now an enemy of the government, Dr. Antonio Guiteras, secretary of war in the Grau cabinet and a confirmed radical. Mendieta's advisers took care to explain it was Guiteras' weapon they were employing, and this was regarded as confirmation of reports that the government believes Guiteras a guilding light in the current agitation.

fight against increased arms expenditures to the very galleries of Parliament.

Shortly after Sir John Simon, foreign secretary, began to defend the government's new defense policy, a woman arose in the gallery and shouted: "omeWn want peace. Down with the white paper" (which explained the government's Attendants hurriedly ejected her.

Government spokesmen argued the new program was necessary in the face of increased arming by other countries, including the United States.

On another occasion the debate was interrupted by women, who flung pacifist leaflets down from the visitors' gallery. They were ejected, shouting denunciations of the white paper.

Say Reich Making Guns.

Labor and Liberal opposition declared the increased expenses "gravely jeopardized the prospect of any disarmament convention." A general countered with the statement that Germany is building 500 field guns a month.

While the debate proceeded a service "for the intercession of peace" was held not far from Commons. After the service the congregation joined others gathered in the lobby.

One of the women who was put out yelled "not a penny for war."

"Rearmament is going on all over the world," Simon said, despite Britain's attempts to lead in the other direction. The vital purpose of trips he and Capt. Anthony Eden, Lord Privy Seal, are to make to European capitals shortly, he explained, "is to secure conditions in which Germany may return to the League of Nations."

League "Best Security."

"We are convinced there is no security for the world comparable with the effective working of a real universal League of Nations," he asserted.

Referring to the white paper's "chilling" effect on Adolf Hitler, Simon said the plan for a joint air pact including Germany has not been changed.

"We were glad to notice that the German government welcomed its fair and friendly spirit," he said. "Nothing has been said here or elsewhere that qualifies that situation in the least degree."

Brig. Gen. Spears told Commons "Germany is reputed to be building 300 field guns a month. Lately, I believe that figure has gone up to 500."

Challenged to produce his authority, Spears refused, but added: "It is common knowledge that although general exports are low and other firms consequently are working on short time, German armament firms are all working overtime."

Stanley Baldwin, government leader in the absence of Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald, denied the charges of labor members that the cabinet was leading the nation toward another war.

He declared the government felt the country had no equality under existing naval treaties because the United States was building up to treaty limits. He said the government's efforts to prevent the United States and other powers from such action was unavailing.

Japan Fleet Cited.

Japan, he said, "probably will have a complete under-age fleet in 1936 and it is a far more modern navy than we have."

As to the government's white paper, which started all the debate in Parliament, Baldwin declared it contained nothing that had not been stated in speeches during 1934. He referred to his own speech in which he said the Rhine was now Britain's frontier in Europe.

He said the white paper was not aimed exclusively at any one country, such as Germany (Hitler cancelled the visit of Sir John Simon, immediately after the white paper came out, but later set a new date) but the government felt it should be frank in order to clarify the atmosphere and make a European peace agreement more possible.

Baldwin told Parliament the government hoped Sir John's trip to Berlin and that of Capt. Anthony Eden to Warsaw and Moscow would bring Britain nearer to security.

League Is "Basis."

The government's peace policy, he said, was based upon the League of Nations. This was a direct reply to Clement Richard Attlee, the labor spokesman, who had moved a motion of censure declaring the white paper indicated the government was moving away from the league and its principles "back to world anarchy of an armament race."

Baldwin said he regarded the league as not completely effective now because Germany and Japan have withdrawn and the United States was still outside of it, making Britain's own increase of defenses a necessity.

Soviet Press Scores German 'Propaganda'

By the Associated Press.

Moscow, March 11.—The official Soviet press today accused Germany of using its "propaganda machine" to diffuse the idea that war between the U. S. S. R. and Japan is inevitable. On the contrary, it declared, relations with Japan are improving.

Russian newspapers labeled as a malicious invention German reports that Joseph Stalin and other Soviet leaders had decided to make a play for American and other support by spreading a false impression that communism is in a period of self-liquidation.

The communist press directed its attack at an article said to have been printed in the Volkischer Beobachter, German national Socialist organ.

This alleged report, as reprinted in Moscow papers, declared the political bureau of the Communist Party, after hearing a speech by Stalin, decided to authorize the spread of a false impression in Washington, London and Paris in order to attract the support of those countries which will form the strongest coalition. * * * even if it is necessary temporarily to renounce the open operation of principles upon which the Communist Party and the Soviet government are based."

The Moscow press declared the Beobachter report was merely another episode in "the organization of plots, espionage and calumnies" by "German literary bandits."

"Factor for Peace."

Replying to a German implication that the Red army threatens world peace, the Communist organ Pravda said the Red army is an important factor in keeping peace because it serves "to cool the aggressive spirit of German Nazis."

The Journal De Moscou, French language paper published here, declared the German campaign is calculated to coincide with the forthcoming visit to Berlin of Sir John Simon, British foreign secretary. The newspaper said:

"Berlin wants to appear before Simon as a pioneer in the struggle against bolshevism and lead the negotiations away from pacification of Europe and direct them into the line of a general war against the U. S. S. R."

State Reducing Forest Blazes

District Wardens Are Told of Progress; Plans Made for Spring Activity.

By the Associated Press.

Cumberland, Md., March 11.—Forest fires have gradually decreased in Mayland during the last ten years. Modern forestry and public educa on are credited with part of the decrease.

Assistant State Forester W. J. Quick, jr., gave this information today to district wardens in conference here. The wardens gathered from Allegany, Garrett, Washington and Frederick counties.

Plans for fire prevention during the spring months were made at two sessions. Experiments with short-wave radio sets for quick reporting of fires was disclosed.

Quick said that 62 per cent of the area of Allegany and Garrett counties is in forest lands.

claiming to be a sister of Rose, confirmed this account. Police told a different story. They have been working on the case since the kidnaping, Inspector Frank Burke said, and are inclined to doubt the kidnaping angle.

"I feel certain it is not a kidnaping," he asserted. Detective Paul W. Jones, who arrested Leo Miller, said to be another brother of those seized at St. Charles, also said he was doubtful of the kidnaping angle.

According to police officers who worked on the case, Rose, a pretty brunette, was in love with George Miller. He was unable, or unwilling, to pay a dowry to the girl's father who, police say, asked for $3,500 before he would consent to the marriage.

Rose is said to have rebelled at what she called being "put on sale like a cow or a horse," and police investigation is said to have revealed that she and George—and the rest of the Miller family—jointly eloped.

But Demetro, angry, went to police, told the kidnaping story which Russell, the small brother, is said to have substantiated. Detective Jones and New York police arrested Leo Miller, who gave a New York City address, and he is now held on a grand larceny charge. Demetro having said he took $105 at the time of the girl's disappearance. Leo claims that Rose took this.

And there the strange story of romance, intrigue, and high gypsy finance rests. At the Demetro home it was said that Mr. and Mrs. Demetro set out in their car, gypsy like, to find the errant daughter. The denouement came when they located them camped in a field in Calcasieu Parish after a lengthy chase which started after the kidnaping.

Mr. Hoover first learned of the arrests, he said, from newspaper reporters. At police headquarters surprise was expressed at the charges preferred. Perhaps, detectives said, more would be learned when Leo Miller appears in court Thursday to tell his side of the disappearance of Mr. Demetro's $105.

Dashes Through Flames.

Williams dashed through the blazing gasoline to shut off the motor.

Locke rushed through the flames to cut off the gasoline intake valve. Copp seized an extinguisher and ran in to check the fire at the point where it would do the most damage. He is credited with having prevented an explosion of the gasoline-filled truck which already had caught fire.

All three men battled until they practically collapsed, and had about extinguished the fire before arrival of the post fire-fighting forces. District apparatus arrived after the blaze was out.

Medals Sought for Heroes.

Maj. Scanlon declared the fire was "purely accidental."

Officers at the post were reported to have already inaugurated a plan to ask the War Department to recommend medals for the trio.

In addition, the enlisted personnel launched a move to have Congress pension each of the men for life, if he survives.

All three were reported to have been so badly burned that if they live they will be maimed and disfigured for life. The hospital reports they have second and third degree burns about face, hands, arms and necks.

Stone Holding B. & O. Data Set

Company Moves 700-lb. Marker to Baltimore Building.

By the Associated Press.

Baltimore, March 11.—A 700-pound stone in which are sealed records of the organization of the Baltimore & Ohio more than 100 years ago was moved today to a permanent resting place on a marble base in the road's building here.

First placed in what is now the Mount Clare branch of the railroad, the stone was sealed in July, 1828, by Charles Carroll of Carrollton, at that time the only surviving signer of the Declaration of Independence.

Modern records of the railroad's development and operation were added to the memorial before C. M. Heany, superintendent of the Baltimore & Ohio Building, and William K. Byrne, contracting superintendent, lowered it, without ceremony, to its new resting place.

Inside a glass panel on a nearby wall are the shovel, trowel and hammer used by Carroll in the original dedication.

Lawyers Trace Riches Mellon Made in Steel

Growth of $150,000 Backing to $39,000,000 Told in Tax Case.

By the Associated Press.

Pittsburgh, March 11.—The story of the venture into steel by the Mellons, in which their $150,000 "backing" of two young engineers grew in 30 years to $39,000,000 was started today at Andrew W. Mellon's income-tax hearing.

As Andrew's father had aided the late H. C. Frick with loans, and as Andrew and his brother, the late R. B. Mellon, had helped finance the development of aluminum, the Mellons in 1900 backed H. H. McClintic and C. D. Marshall in the organization of the McClintick-Marshall Construction Co.—later the McClintick - Marshall Corporation, second largest fabricating steel concern in America.

The two engineers put in $50,000 apiece and managed the business. A. W. and R. B. Mellon put in $75,000 each and received 60 per cent of the stock.

Charge of Government.

The Government, in charging Mellon underpaid his 1931 income tax by $3,089,000, asserts he failed to pay by $1,000,00 the amount of taxes due from an alleged merger of McClintick-Marshall with Bethlehem Steel.

A. W. Mellon's personal share of the stocks and bonds given by the Bethlehem for the steel business of the company is placed at $6,549,000 by the Government and his share in other assets of the concern—principally 83½ per cent interest in the Koppers Co., of Delaware—at $13,500,000. This made his holdings worth more than $20,000,000.

The Government is striving to show the Bethlehem transaction was a sale and not a merger within the meaning of the tax laws, and that the entire $6,549,000 received by Mellon is taxable at the 20 per cent surtax rate.

Mellon's Contention.

Mellon contends he can be assessed only the capital gain of 12½ per cent on $2,373,000 worth of bonds which he sold after receiving payments made by Bethlehem for the McClintic-Marshall stock.

Earle J. Patterson, former secretary-treasurer of McClintic-Marshall, was on the stand all day, identifying various papers relating to the concern's organization and the later transaction with Bethlehem. Before they get into the records the entire testimony on this phase of the case, attorneys estimated two weeks or longer may be necessary.

Mellon left the hearing for the first time since it began three weeks ago to attend the funeral of his close friend, Henry C. McEldowney, president of the Union Trust Co.

Apple Growers Seek Rails' Aid

Fear Northwest Competition; to Ask Backing in ICC Rate Cut Appeal.

Richmond, Va., March 11 (AP).—To meet threatened competition of apples from the Pacific Northwest, apple growers from Virginia, West Virginia, Maryland and Pennsylvania will ask the cooperation of eastern rail carriers in a plea before the Interstate Commerce Commission for a 33 per cent reduction in apple freight rates.

Tentative plans for the step have been made by Representatives of the four States, H. E. Ketner, commerce counsel for the Virginia Corporation Commission, said today. He has been asked to participate in a conference with rail officials on behalf of the Virginia growers.

The attitude of the railroads on the proposal is problematical, since they are seeking a general upward revision of rates.

Shippers in the Pacific northwest are asking a reduction in rates from the Northwest to Mississippi River crossing points, and a reduction all the way to Eastern markets.

The first reduction plea will be made to W. B. Hardie, ICC traffic director, in a hearing in Washington tomorrow. The other will be aired in Washington Thursday before the Eastern Trunk Line committee, a railroad group.

House Votes End Of Pink-Slip Law

minutes," he warned, "what it took us years to accomplish."

As a last resort Blanton sought to require publicity for only those incomes exceeding $25,000. His amendment was rejected, 175 to 25.

Harrison cautioned taxpayers not to be confused by the House vote. He pointed out completion of congressional action on the question could not be expected before Saturday, the last day for the filing of returns. Persons who fail to file pink slips will be subject to a $5 fine.

There is only an outside chance that the repeal measure will be reported out at once by the Finance Committee. Harrison said he would not press for action if lengthy discussion threatened.

He explained Secretary Morgenthau reported compilation of the slips would not be finished before October anyhow and minimized the necessity for speed.

"I don't want the pink slip bill to tie up consideration of the works bill," he added. "We have too many other matters on hand to take it up now if there is going to be much discussion."

Though personally in favor of repeal, Harrison seemed inclined to put little faith in polls showing a majority of Senators against publicity.

"I don't think there's been any big change of sentiment here," he said. "I haven't heard of it and I haven't seen it."

Rockefeller Better, Takes Spin in Auto

By the Associated Press.

Ormond Beach, Fla., March 11. John D. Rockefeller, sr., felt so well today that he took his daily automobile ride along the Halifax River road. He appeared entirely recovered from the slight indisposition of the last few days.

Dr. John N. Fogarty, the Rockefeller family physician, denied today that the 95-year-old multimillionaire had been really ill.

"Visiting him was a matter of routine," he said. "I found him in good health. He is in better physical condition now than he has been for some time. He required no treatment or medication."

Trial of Insull As Embezzler Given to Jury

Defendant Admits Signing Vouchers for Brother's Brokerage Account.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, March 11.—The trial of Samuel Insull as an alleged embezzler of $66,000 from his $1,000,000,000 company treasury moved swiftly to a close today.

By night the jury in State criminal court was expected to retire to decide whether the former multimillionaire stole from Middle West Utilities Co. to save his brother's personal fortune, or whether he transferred funds to stave off losses to his stockholders.

Elderly defendant and youthful prosecutor—John O'Hora—engaged in a brief, bitter argument before the jury before final arguments were started late in the day.

Insull Cross-Examined.

The cross-examination elicited from Insull an admission that he signed the $30,000 and $36,000 vouchers which were paid to a brokerage house when Martin Insull's account was threatened with a sell-out.

"You knew and intended that money to go as payment on Martin Insull's account?" O'Hora asked him.

"Yes," Insull replied.

He told of yielding his 5,000-acre estate at Libertyville and other possessions to his creditors, but denied knowing whether his younger brother had any assets when the crash threatened.

Charge Is Denied.

The prosecutor asked whether he had ever "suggested to your brother, Martin, that he liquidate all his properties to satisfy creditors?"

"I did not," Insull rejoined.

O'Hara switched to the subject of Insull's flight at the time of his indictment.

Insull identified four cablegrams he had received abroad, advising him that no extradition treaty existed between the United States and Greece. He related, under the prosecutor's questioning, that he went from Paris to Turin and Milano, thence by plane to Rome and Albanya and on to Athens.

Says He Was Shanghaied.

"I was shanghaied off a Greek ship in the harbor at Istanbul, Turkey," he asserted.

"Shanghaied?" the prosecutor queried.

"Just kidnaped," said Insull.

The State asked Judge Cornelius J. Harrington to call Oliver E. McCormick, treasurer of Middle West Utilities Co., as a court witness to testify whether he had not told the grand jury he had acquainted Insull with all the details of the $66,000 transfer which Insull has said he only learned after the trial began. The request was refused, and final arguments were ordered.

3½ per cent rate, and also to make loans to such institutions at 4 per cent. Mr. Jones gave the opinion that 6 per cent should be the maximum which these companies, in turn, should charge for loans.

Meantime, the February report of the RFC showed that the Government's big bank is continuing to receive from repayments more than it is disbursing. The figures were $65,000,000 for disbursements and $68,000,000 for repayments, not counting $17,000,000 earned in interest and dividends.

Pupin, Inventor, Fighting for Life

Professor in Danger at N.Y. Medical Center.

By the Associated Press.

New York, March 11.—Physicians reported no improvement tonight in the condition of Prof. Michael I. Pupin, famous for his inventions in telephony and wireless telegraphy, who is critically ill at Harkness Pavilion of Columbia Presbyterian Medical Center.

The 76-year-old scientist and Columbia University professor of electro mechanics has been suffering from inflammation of the kidneys and paralysis of the legs for some years, and was taken to the hospital three weeks ago as the result of the after effects of influenza.

Prof. Pupin invented the "Pupin coil," which made underground telephone wires possible, improved X-ray photography, and devised the system of "tuning in" to separate radio messages.

Virginian Granted Writ in Appeal

Sentence of Buck Cleek Is Overruled.

By the Associated Press.

Richmond, Va., March 11.—The State Supreme Court of Appeals today granted a writ of error to Buck Cleek, convicted in Scott County Circuit Court of violating the now dead Layman prohibition act by possessing ardent spirits.

Cleek was fined $250 by the lower court and sentenced to six months' imprisonment.

The petition in the case said when officers raided his father's barn Cleek claimed 250 gallons of whisky found there as his own. The counsel claims this was a natural act of a son wishing to protect his father. The petition further asserted that under the Virginia law a confession made outside of court has no legal standing unless corroborated.

Relief Babies.

Official and private studies show that the birth rate among families on relief is much higher than for families of a comparable class who are supported by employed bread-winners. The statistics presented in a number of special studies of an official and private nature lead irresistibly to the conclusion that babies are most numerous in families least capable of assuming responsibility for their maintenance.

According to the FERA, children born to families on relief rolls during the period from October, 1929, to October, 1933, number over 1,600,000 and constitute 12.7 per cent of the total relief roll population. Children of the same age account for only 9.6 per cent of the general population. It also appears that the birth rate is exceptionally high in families with incomes under $1,200 and among those with no employed workers.

The relatively low birth rate among the rich and well-to-do classes has long been a theme for discussion among sociologists. The training, the personal qualities and the inherited advantages of these economically more fortunate groups, which create a sense of responsibility for the upbringing of their children, are too frequently lacking among the less well-endowed. Consequently, the Malthusian law, which postulates a tendency of the birth rate to outstrip means of subsistence is always applicable to a restricted circle in this country. On a more extensive scale the same tendency brings suffering and death to millions living on the margin of subsistence in many parts of the world.

In the light of this experience the high birth rate among those dependent on charity is not surprising in times like the present, when millions of people know that relief funds will increase as their families grow. The effect of relief payments is to break down a sense of responsibility and create a generation of paupers. That tendency should have been clearly visualized by the FERA. Early in the nineteenth century a similar situation led to revolutionary reforms in methods of administering poor relief in England.

Certainly these findings of the FERA emphasize the desirability of transferring employable persons from relief rolls to jobs which will necessitate maintenance of their families out of their own earnings. Employed workers, finding a growing family a liability instead of an asset will not be inclined to make such rapid additions to the numbers of their dependents.

Polluted Park Streams.

If some future satirist wishes to make a devastating attack upon municipal planning in the United States he will need to look no further than the official records of Washington. For the committee studying the purification of local streams recently recorded that 950 homes are still pouring their sewage into the Capital's finest park.

This report should not obscure the notable progress which is being made toward the purification of Rock Creek. A considerable portion of the sewage which formerly polluted summer playgrounds has already been subjected to modern sanitation. But much remains to be done.

Engineer Commissioner Sultan has been elected chairman of the committee which is pressing this important work. The Commissioner has already manifested intense interest in community problems of this sort, and an aptitude for working them out. Col. Sultan's efforts in this direction may not result in the erection of a monument to his memory. But he can count on a finer reward from the improved health and happiness of children now menaced by an artificially contaminated stream in Washington's chief outdoor recreation center.

He Was A Man.

Yesterday the flags on all Baltimore schoolhouses flew at half-mast. A great physician lay dead—a bachelor who had devoted his life to the protection of childhood against disease. He was one of the best beloved of Baltimoreans. But just as no one city could monopolize the personality of Dr. John Ruhrah, world-famous pediatrician, so other communities must share the loss of his passing.

Dr. Ruhrah was first of all a highly civilized individual, kindly, witty, tolerant and cultured. As a physician, his knowledge and skill was attested by the high offices which he held in numerous professional faculties and academies. In his beautifully rounded nonprofessional life, music was always his chief interest. And it was characteristic of the man that he strove to further musical appreciation with the same kindly energy and self-effacement which underlay his professional work.

In 1930, infantile paralysis—a disease to which Dr. Ruhrah had devoted a large part of his studies—struck him down. At the age of 59, when most men would not have thought it worth while to make such a terrific struggle, he overcame his affliction to the extent of resuming his practice and even broadening his interests. Such indomitable courage, worthy to be ranked with the similar heroism of Franklin D. Roosevelt, was of the essence of the man.

When courage, learning, sympathy and perfect aristocratic bearing are so mingled to form a single personality the loss of that rare figure is felt more widely than we realize. For it is no common achievement to learn as skillfully as did Dr. Ruhrah how to make the best of life.

A Note Of Caution.

Encouraging as are the recent gains in business activity, there is insufficient evidence at hand to warrant the enthusiastic prediction of Charles G. Dawes that the depression will be over within two months. The business analyst has to look forward as well as backward in appraising the prospects of recovery. And he is properly more concerned with the consolidation of ground which has been won than with alluring predictions of rapid advance to the ultimate objective.

That industrial production during the first two months of 1935 is estimated to have been above that of any corresponding period during the past five years does not warrant forgetting that over 20,000,000 Americans are still dependent upon relief funds. Moreover, the dominant part played by the automobile industry in bringing about the rise in industrial activity testifies to the uneven character of the upturn, and casts some doubt upon its permanence.

Nevertheless, increases in employment, and improvement in the earning position of several of the country's largest industrial corporations, coincide with the current announcement of two large refunding issues. Such factors encourage strong hope for further improvement in the heavy industries, responsible for so large a proportion of existing unemployment. On the other hand, the railroad situation remains distinctly gloomy. In 1934 the roads had a greater deficit in net income than in the preceding year, and since the beginning of 1935 the trend has continued downward.

Recent increases in the general price level are also viewed with mixed feelings, despite the fact that the spectacular rise in farm products has enabled the Administration to make considerable progress toward the restoration of prewar parity for agricultural commodities.

An advance in the prices of farm products amounting to 39 per cent from the low point of 1934 is of great benefit to agriculture, and therefore to industry in general. But the resultant rise in living costs causes the American Federation of Labor to point out that the business upswing may easily be checked unless buying power proves adequate to sustain it. Yet demands for higher wages will tend to retard industrial expansion, and without increased purchasing power consumer resistance will be exerted to bring about a reaction in the prices of foodstuffs and other necessaries.

Apart from the strictly economic factors bearing upon recovery, it is also essential to allow for the political uncertainties and the international exchange disturbances that affect the course of domestic business, directly and indirectly. The uncertainty regarding the fate of important pending legislation, the growing budgetary deficits, and the increasing tension within the ranks of Administration supporters, are causes of anxiety to business men, making them hesitate to expand the scale of their operations. Then, too, the collapse of sterling exchange quotations gives rise to fears of an injurious contest in currency depreciation.

It is very noteworthy that the sporadic business improvement under way for several months has not been followed by any pronounced let-down in activity. This is the more cheering in view of the present unsettled state of the country and the world at large. We have not reached the point, however, where it is safe to indulge in predictions that the depression will soon be relegated to the past. Like ancient assurances that prosperity was just around the corner, the belief that the depression has been routed is the expression of a wishful thinking.

It would be dangerous if that psychology should supplant concerted and intensified effort to make the prospects of recovery more sure.

The Infinite Past.

Not an historian or an anthropologist—only a poet or a philosopher—should report the newest news from Mosul. For that news out-dates history and all but bewilders anthropology. It is almost the oldest news on earth.

In the valley of the ancient River Tigris, where scientists lately found the ruins of "the world's eldest city," they have now grubbed still deeper and found faint traces of a city older still. Close by the scene of these antiquarian labors, a few tottering stones mark the site on which more recent Nenevah flourished. The dazed discoverers leap to acclamation: they have added ten centuries to the age of the race; they have tracked the trail of man still further toward its misty origins.

It is, however, an announcement that evokes two-edged conclusions. Unrolling another inch of the scroll of time gone by, the news hints at such a relative infinity of the past as drives the mind to search the more absolute infinity of the future. It recalls the speculations of Spengler upon the short life of civilizations and upon the long life of the race which so painfully builds them—so carelessly breaks them into shard.

In an era when change rushes on us from every point of the compass such discoveries move the individual to meditate upon how long civilizations have endured. But they also encourage speculation as to the "expectancy," as the life insurance people put it, of that particular civilization in which we live.

Already Involved.

State Department officials, said an Associated Press dispatch yesterday, are watching Cuban developments closely, "but make it plain there exists no chance of the United States becoming involved."

The phraseology, even assuming that careful official language was distorted, is highly unfortunate. For everyone who knows anything about the Cuban situation knows that it is not now a question of whether or not our Government desires to become involved. It involved itself, and that deeply, by expressing open approval of President Mendieta and covert disapproval of President Grau. We can not disguise the fact that we have taken sides in Cuba merely by stating that we do not intend to complicate an anarchic situation by proceeding to armed intervention there.

The Department of State refused to recognize President Grau during his four months in office. When he fell, as any Cuban president must under the spell of our disfavor, we recognized President Mendieta in five days. Although the United States has done everything possible, short of military assistance, to uphold Mendieta, he has been forced to declare a state of war in order to remain in office against the wishes of a hostile populace. The casual observer may certainly be pardoned if he concludes that we backed the wrong horse.

It is unquestionable that the Department of State acted with care and deliberation in a very difficult situation. One may feel sure—though many informed observers would contradict it—that by all tokens Mendieta was a better man for the Cuban presidency than Grau. But that is not the issue. The issue is quite simply whether or not it was the business of the Department of State to throw its weight into the scales in making a decision for the Cuban people. The decision to do so always seemed out of key with the Roosevelt policy of non-intervention in Latin-America. And now that our choice is working out badly we can not duck responsibility for having made it.

Broadly speaking, there are just two policies which we can pursue in our relations with the turbulent Caribbean republics. We can help to select their rulers, and then back them up with force when their peoples rise in revolt. Alternatively we can follow the so-called Estrada doctrine of real non-intervention. Under this we would neither grant nor withhold recognition to revolutionary regimes, but would maintain or recall our diplomatic agents without concealing our preferences, but also without attempting to influence their right to choose their own governments.

To try to compromise between these divergent lines of policy is to invite disaster. It is to direct anti-American sentiment against the candidate of our preference, while denying him support when his opponents consolidate to overthrow him. With the backing of the army, Mendieta may continue to hold power. But as a popular president of Cuba, he is through.

To Have And To Hold.

Following the example of the University of South Carolina, the University of Iowa installed and has just concluded its first course in marriage. Forty students, both men and women, enlisted for the first semester and not a single member flunked the course.

All aspects of so-called "connubial bliss"—legal, economic, financial and domestic—were propounded to the students by experts in their respective spheres. No hard-and-fast rules were laid down for picking or holding a mate. In other words, the university is attempting to sell marriage on the ground that it is all wool and a yard wide. But at the same time it refuses to guarantee that it won't shrink or fade.

At first the university authorities were hesitant about offering such an advanced course in a State that is generally known for its impeccable respectability. Therefore, as a sop to ultraconservatism, the work was given under the name of "Religion and Social Problems." But, as is natural in an agricultural Commonwealth, the spade eventually was called the spade.

Both the class and the instructors feel that the course is definitely a success. In fact, the only suggested change is that a full year, instead of a single semester, be devoted to it. Surely there will be no dissenting voice to this. One semester may be sufficiently long to tell potential brides and bridegrooms what to do, once they have achieved the married state. But, from observation, it would appear that the scholastic year would be none too long a time in which to tell them what not to do.

Letters To The Editor

The Post welcomes letters from its readers. All communications must be signed with the writer's name and address. Upon publication initials or pen names will be used if requested. Letters are subject to condensation, and in no case should they exceed 250 words.

Too Much Duplication.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I believe if adopted, the following plan not only would facilitate the handling of applicants for Government jobs but would save Uncle Sam much time, labor and money:

Let one application suffice for all governmental departments. As things are now, if a person applies at the FERA for a job, he is given an application to fill out. If he, to have as many irons in the fire as possible, then goes on to the NRA and applies for a job there he is handed another application to fill out—a duplicate of the first one. If he then goes on to PWA he is handed another application to fill out.

Every efficiently managed corporation follows this suggested plan. Yet the Government allows each department to operate as a separate agency, involving a stupendous repetition of work and a stupendous waste of application forms, letterheads and other stationery.

If, when I first applied for a job in Washington, I had been asked: "Have you ever worked for the Government?" I could have answered "Yes." A letter sent that night to the Government office with which I had been connected would have brought an answer verifying my statement and my status within ten days. Then I could have supplied the details of my life, if requested, for the period since I had left the service, thereby saving numerous letters, repetitions of one another, to past employers and acquaintances necessary to vouch for me. Why not suggest this very logical plan?

Dry Alabama.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: When I lived in Washington I wrote for The Post letters which you kindly published. You discovered in those letters that I was an "ardent dry."

Now that I am living in Alabama, my native State, I am asking the privilege of a bit of space to tell my friends among your readers how glad I am that we "fanatic prohibitionists" have won a victory in the repeal campaign. It was a State referendum and the majority against repeal of our dry laws was 8,166 in 51 out of 67 counties. The wets pushed the issue on us, and this is what we gave them for their zeal.

We shall expect you, Mr. Editor, to aid us in the matter of inducing the Government to make good its pledge to protect dry territory, for by this good majority we have declared ourselves dry.

You are continuing to maintain your standard of excellence in the publication of The Post.

What A Forum Is For.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Having learned that the much-cussed and discussed Washington Open Forum will be addressed next Sunday afternoon, March 10, at the Continental Hotel by Congressman Crawford, a 100 per cent high protection Republican, I have sworn a solemn vow to be present and see what it is all about.

One reason I shall attend this lecture is that I understand the meeting will be free to everybody, with only a voluntary collection. I have found the Town Hall's lectures very informing, but its admission fee strikes me as rather hard on many people who have to hug closely to their dollars. It seems to me preferable to seek no profit from such meetings and depend on a collection to cover bare expenses. This is a form of education, and educational advantages ought to cost as little as possible.

Another reason for hearing Mr. Crawford is that I am really interested in his topic, "Protection or Free Trade?" I am wondering if he can answer Henry George's cogent arguments in favor of free trade in his book that bore the same name as the Congressman's lecture bears. Crawford's speeches in Congress indicate he is an extremely capable defender of protectionism and I welcome this opportunity to hear the case stated for this philosophy—even if I do not agree with it. After all, that is what a forum is for, isn't it—to hear both sides and find out the real facts?

In Praise Of Dr. Orem.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Spending the winter here, I daily buy The Post. Ere returning to my summer home in Bar Harbor, Me., may I sincerely compliment you on an astonishingly fine newspaper? Nothing escapes your notice.

For instance, you announce a series of musical lectures absolutely free to the public; to be delivered next Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, March 11, 12 and 13, at 9:30 a. m.; and planned for their spacious hall, 1330 G street, by the members of the Homer L. Kitt Co., who have been exceptionally lucky to secure Dr. Preston Ware Orem as lecturer. Personally, I have known Dr. Orem for many years, and unhesitatingly rank him among the remarkable musicians with whom I have the honor of being acquainted—Walter Damrosch, Josef Hofman, Ernest Schelling, Arthur Fickenscher, Kurt Hetzel and others.

Ingersoll's Atheism.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The Post was not in error when it referred to Robert G. Ingersoll as an atheist rather than an agnostic. If you will consult the Dresden edition of the "Works of Robert G. Ingersoll," volume eight, that given over to "interviews," page 247, you will find this:

"Question—Don't you think the belief of the agnostic is more satisfactory to the believer than that of the atheist?

"Answer—There is no difference. The agnostic is an atheist. The atheist is an agnostic. The agnostic says, 'I do not know, but I do not believe there is any God.' The atheist says the same. The orthodox Christian says he knows there is a God; but we know that he does not know. He simply believes. He can not know. The atheist can not know that God does not exist."

From that Ingersoll regarded the terms "agnostic" and "atheist" as interchangeable, both negativing the belief of a God.

We of this age take a somewhat different view. We call one an agnostic who honestly confesses he does not know and can not know, an atheist who thinks he knows there is no God.

From the viewpoint of Ingersoll, The Post was not especially in error.

Healthy And Optimistic.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The New Deal has created many innovations in the political working of our Government. Some have proved good to a limited number of people, others are trying to make good, but the next two years will prove decisively what the New Deal actually is.

People, as a matter of fact, from coast to coast and from Maine to Mexico in all classes, trades, professions and walks of life, the still in doubt as to really what it is all about—even to the politicians in administrative positions, it seems all Greek. I suggest that everyone look ahead, forget the past, and have patience, courage and faith in our President. I honestly believe he means well and is sincere in his endeavor to accomplish the great job he took over two years ago. Trust in God, and time will work wonders for mankind. The writer had a good home, business, cars and everything a man had to live for, but since 1929, with financial reverses and business conditions, today he is flat broke, but happy, healthy and optimistic and would like to see every citizen the same.

Old Age Pension.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: As the majority of people over 60 years old are poor financially and unable to do hard physical labor, a reasonable Government pension, $15 or $20 a month paid to them would be a wonderful help in their declining years. It would not only be a blessing to all old people who are in need and depending on their children and friends to help them, but it would also relieve county governments from having to support poor farms to take care of dependent old people.

If a fund can be provided without material injury to the Government, with which the aged can be taken care of, the sooner it is done the better it will be for the old and needy of this great Nation.

Toys That Pervert Play.

No more toy pistols in Montreal! That's the vigorous reply of city officials to too many holdups staged with such weapons.

Even more significant is the indirect benefit to the nursery, where young imaginations will not so frequently be turned to murder games, or the imitation of robbery, suicide and gangsterism.

Under what fatal lapse in reason do parents teach or permit their children to play at war and crime, only to complain in later years of the cruelty and dishonor they have thoughtlessly helped to incite? Even if merchants, seeking every outlet for products, line their shelves with toys of destruction, parents and givers of gifts need not buy. There are enough harmless—and stimulating—toys.

No more toy pistols, machine guns, swords and cannon. It may seem a small step, but it means progress toward ending the grown-up causes of war and crime.

Pink Slips for Pale People.

Post Office, Tuesday.

DEAR Collector of Internal Revenue for My District On or Before March 15, 1935—

Yours of recent date received and in reply would say am addressing you in this way because the letter I got from you said I ought. It looks to me kind of formal, considering how many years I and you have been corresponding with each other, and considering how intimate your questions have always been. But then your letter is a little formal, too, and it distinctly states my reply is to go to you as above stated.

So being a good citizen, I naturally do it, though I think it would of been more friendly if you had signed your name to your letter, because generally I don't pay any attention to letters which don't have any signature to them. I think a man had ought to sign his letters with his own name in his own hand-writing if he is willing to stand up for what they say, and if he isn't he hadn't ought send them in the first place.

* * * *

Now, Mr. Collector, I don't want you to get any idea I am complaining about your letter, which I can tell you took a lot of trouble over. I understand how you're not asking all the questions in your personal capacity, but representing the President. And I believe everybody had ought to support the President, even Congress and the Republicans left in it. I am 100 per cent for Mr. Franklin Roosevelt because he got us out of depression.

But just the same I don't think it is necessary for me to answer all you inquire about. And it is my opinion you'll agree with me when you hear why.

Dear Mr. Collector, a lot of your questions are the way my preacher says, "tautological," meaning you have the answers already.

For instance, you want me to put in my residence, when all the time you've got it in your files, for you put it on the envelope of your letter to me.

Of course, it was nice of you to inquire was I married during my taxable year; any person appreciates an interest in his family. Still, I always understood collectors of internal revenue were good politicians, and where I come from originally a politician keeps posted on the side whether his constituents continue married, so he won't make social errors when he writes to them, and if he don't keep posted he slides around the subject. But here you go one worse, asking was I living with my "husband or wife."

And here's something worse yet: You say, "If not married, were you the head of a family?"

Mr. Collector, you can't honestly expect a self-respecting citizen to reply to that!

Then about "how many dependents received their support from" me, you had ought to be more explicit. We had two dogs, and the children brought in a kitty, but one of the dogs killed the kitty pretty soon, and the other dog got lost, and I can't exactly remember for how long it was while he wasn't dependent on me. Also, am I to charge off cost of ad. to get him back and reward?

Another thing I'm having trouble over is where you tell me to tell you what was my "earned income." Well, I asked the editor and he says I didn't earn a cent.

Am I to put down what he says I earned, I mean zero? Or should I put what I think I earned, being considerably more than I'll ever get?

More white spaces'd help, too:

Here's a question where you try to make out you're interested in "any changes" that have happened to me "under questions, 2, 4, or 5 during the year." Now, question 4 is that one about whether I had an irregular family, and, as I said, I simply scorn to pay any attention to that. But the others are different. No. 2 is the one about am I still married, and No. 5 is the one about the dogs.

I'd appreciate your wanting all my home news if you sounded sincere, but it would look more sincere if you gave me some more room to write it in. You're asking about a whole year, and all you allow me for answering is an inch-and-a-quarter.

Well, Mr. Collector, there's more I might say, but I won't. I've spoken my mind and hope you'll take it in the spirit intended. So I'll just add this following.

You inclose a piece of pink paper. That must be a mistake of your stenographer. It asks my total gross income with deductions, net income, "total tax against net income for purposes of normal tax" and "tax payable." But nearly all that will be in the other return anyhow, and I don't think any of your tax is normal, and I haven't got any "tax payable."

I will send in my other return after receiving the desired advice. Thanking you in advance.

Yours truly,

THE POST IMPRESSIONIST.

P. S.: I find where you want to know contributions to charity. I made one. So please deduct price of it, an Irish Sweepstake ticket. That is a fund for hospitals abroad. And if the Government then owes me any money for more deductions than normal tax exemption, kindly send check at convenience.

Japan's Machine Age As Japanese View It

Effects of Industrial Revolution Are Mitigated By Many Forms of Welfare Work.

By K. K. Kawakami.

Special Correspondence of The Post.

THE Japanese is not a mere imitator, the hackneyed foreign compliment—or should we say slander?—to the contrary notwithstanding. Worse, he is an incorrigible tinkerer. He takes foreign ideas or foreign things, tinkers with them, remodels them, often improves or spoils them, to adapt them to his own needs. The superior Toyoda loom, now being exported even to Lancashire, is an apt illustration.

In Japan the industrial revolution has not produced the same effects that have been seen in the West, where it originated. Japan's machine age will never be the same as the machine age in America and Europe. Her factory workers are not subjected to the same treatment as are their Occidental brothers and sisters. Read the following extract from the report of Dr. Arno S. Pearce, general secretary of the International Federation of Master Cotton Spinners and Manufacturers, of Manchester, England.

"The welfare work undertaken by the Japanese mills calls for the admiration of anyone who takes the trouble to investigate it impartially. About 80 per cent of the operatives live on the premises, and two hours are daily devoted to schooling. Not only is the ordinary school curriculum provided, but practical subjects and even ethics are taught. The mill operatives of Japan are all able to read and write, and their general standard of education must be quite up to the standard of the mill operatives of Europe. Every operative has a bath daily, and dormitories in which the operatives sleep are an example of cleanliness and comfort."

• • • •

THIS statement is substantiated by M. Ferdinand Maurette, Assistant Director of the Interior national Labor Office, who last year visited 22 Japanese factories which manufacture goods for export. He names among "material advantages" enjoyed by the workers living in factory dormitories "hygienic facilities and free baths and free medical treatment." He found the dormitories "equipped in a clean and sanitary way and not without artistic taste. Many foodstuffs are supplied the workers at a lower price" than the market.

In some of the factories "three sufficiently substantial meals a day are supplied to the workers for 20 yen," or about 7 cents. Among "free advantages of a social and intellectual kind," he names "general and technical education, household education for girls, including the art of arranging flowers and the tea ceremony, reading and recreation rooms, gardening, sports and cinema performances."

Where else on earth are factory girls taught the art of flower arrangement and the etiquette of the ceremonial tea? Nor do you get any idea of what this means unless you know that Japanese ladies of high society spend years studying the intricacies of these esoteric cults. To Japanese factory girls, the factory is both a workshop and a school. They are recruited from among the daughters of poor farmers and peasants. After three or four years of factory life—they seldom work longer—they become housewives, fully prepared to manage their little homes.

Wages prevailing in Japan do not strictly represent the value equivalent of the labor offered. In addition to paying wages, employers usually spend generously for the promotion of the welfare of their workers, though they are not compelled to do so by any law or collective agreement. According to an investigation conducted by the Japan Industrial Club two years ago, the total amount spent for the promotion of the welfare of workers by the 128 companies investigated corresponded to 24 per cent of the total wages paid.

ALTHOUGH there is no unemployment insurance in Japan, dismissed workers are legally entitled to a sum equivalent to their wages for six weeks, and to this is usually added a dismissal allowance varying in proportion to the length of continuous service. For instance, a sum equal to from 15 days' to one month's wages is given a man who served one year continuously, and 4,000 or even 5,000 yen for those who have been in continuous service for 25 or 30 years. Even workers who voluntarily retire from work usually receive from 50 to 70 per cent of the amount of the dismissal allowance referred to. In calculating wages in Japan these allowances, in addition to bonus payments should be added to the nominal earnings.

Japanese workers, for their part, do not work merely for the amount of wages they receive or the length of hours on duty. They take pride in improving their technical skill and in producing goods of superior quality, and are happy when their factories or companies are prosperous. Several years ago, when business depression was severe, many workers voluntarily offered to have their wages reduced or their payment deferred in order to save the factories they worked in from failure.

Japanese workers do not necessarily resort to strikes for the maintenance or improvement of their labor conditions, though there have been many cases of dispute originating in the nonconfidence of workers in their foremen or other supervisors, demands for improvement in their treatment, recognition of labor unions, etc.

• • • •

A SENTIMENTAL lot, these Japanese! In Japan, workers more often go on strike because their employer or foremen is "arrogant" than because they want higher wages or shorter hours. Of course the picture is not always so beautiful as that. Some Japanese economists, versed in the history of the industrial revolution and in the economic theories of the West, present a different view, and explain why the lot of our workers can not be bettered. Here is a typical explanation by Kamekichi Takahashi:

"In every country there are key industries, upon which the conditions of all other industries are dependent. In Japan, the key industry is, and will long continue to be, agriculture. Foreign countries criticize the conditions of labor of the women employed in cotton-spinning mills; yet the wages of two such women are equal to the income of an agricultural family of three persons. They say that Japanese miners' wages are low, yet miners' children are much better fed and better clothed than farmers'. Generally speaking, it may be said that in Japan conditions of work, standards of living and also the output of the worker are much higher in industry than in agriculture.

"What is the reason for the low standard of agriculture in Japan? It is not due to poor agricultural methods. The Japanese farmer is quite as industrious and intelligent as the American or European farmer. The population is, however, so large that each farmer only has a very small plot of land. This is the reason for their low standard of living, which involves a low standard of living in industry. This will continue to be the case as long as the Japanese are unable to emigrate.

• • • •

"As long as the capitalist system persists, the only means of solving the question of low wages in industry will be to solve the question of the still lower incomes prevailing in agriculture. The solution of the latter problem depends on the solution of a third problem: that of overpopulation. As long as no solution can be found for that problem, Japan will be obliged to export large quantities of goods, and consequently its industry will have to produce abundantly and cheaply. The higher the Western nations raise their customs barriers, the more will Japan be obliged to lower the cost of industrial work."

The Japanese government does not subsidize industries or foreign trade, but it encourages the organization of export associations for the purpose of preventing ruinous competition among exporters and of forestalling dumping. Fifty such associations, with some 4,800 members, have been formed.

Most of the members are small manufacturers, as the larger factory owners know how to regulate their own trade without government help. The associations received financial help from the government to the extent of 33,000 yen in 1931, 44,000 yen in 1932, 110,000 yen in 1933, and 100,000 yen in 1934. The money thus received defrays part of the office expenses and the expenses of their 25 branches abroad, mostly in Asia and Oceania.

Time was when Japanese goods were cheap, but poor in quality. That time has passed. Today Japanese goods are cheap and satisfactory. They have proved a blessing to the natives of the colonies of Occidental powers in Africa, Asia and Oceania. But the powers have have raised tariff barriers and adopted other devises to bar out Japanese goods.

Virginia Decides To Shun Movies

Chamber Sees Climate Not Suited for Industry.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Richmond, March 11. — Virginia will make no attempt to take the movie industry away from California, as Florida and other Southern States hope to do if the California Legislature imposes a heavy tax on the production of movies, officials of the Virginia State Chamber of Commerce said today.

The tax measure proposed by the California solons, if it becomes a law, would levy a tax of 1 cent a foot on all film, including both the original film and all duplicates made from it.

Motion pictures made in Virginia have proved that climatic conditions in this State are not suitable to motion picture production, chamber of commerce officials said.

New Plants Supply 379 Jobs.

Baltimore, March 11 (AP).—Jobs for 379 workers were calculated to have been created by the establishment of four new industrial plants and the building of additions to five others here during the last month. Expenditures of $552,000 were entailed.

Along The Potomac

With Carlisle Bargeron

A Cabinet Meeting (Purely Imaginary)

THE boys of the Cabinet, most of them jolly good fellows, are seated in the conference room when Mr. Roosevelt comes in. They get up.

BARGERON.

"Hello, fellows," he says gayly.

"Hello, chief," they chorus.

He sits down and makes himself comfortable. "You fellows have a cigarette?" he asks, as he lights one himself and tosses an open package onto the table. Two or three of them light up.

"Well, what's on anybody's mind today," Mr. Roosevelt asks airily.

Claude stirs nervously and then laughs. He fumbles with a paper clipper.

"I've got something on my mind, chief," he says.

"I'll says he has," laughs Homer.

• • • •

The chief joins in the laughter. "What is it, fellows. Oh, I know. I read something in the papers about it. You've run afoul of McCarl, eh?"

"That's it, chief," responds Claude. "He was standing in the way of the New Deal. I didn't know what to do about it so I went to Homer. Homer told me to go ahead and pay no attention to McCarl."

"That's what I told him, chief," Homer agrees. "Claude's a good fellow and I'm a good fellow and, furthermore, I know you are a good fellow, too."

"Right, right, exactly right," agreed the chief. "Looks like we'll have to make McCarl a good fellow, too, eh?"

At that the three of them, the chief, Homer and Claude, laugh heartily. "Ho, ho, ho," they chorus.

Honest Harold does not laugh, but he sort of grins.

"What's the matter, Harold, don't you agree?" queries the chief.

"Oh, sure he agrees," respond Claude and Homer. "Harold's getting to be all right. He's getting to be a regular fellow. He did a splendid job on Huey's request for the files on Jim."

At this Jim bursts into a loud guffaw. "I'll say he did; he had me on the anxious seat for a while, though. I'm going to send him some more stamps."

The chief, Homer, Claude, Harold and Jim join in the round of laughter that follows.

"Well, I suppose I've made some mistakes in not getting along with the rest of the fellows," says Harold. "I want to be one of the bunch, though."

"Sure you do, sure you do," they all agree.

• • • •

"Henry, I don't hear anything from you. Henry Wallace, I mean. What are you looking so glum about?" It's the chief speaking.

"Death awaits us around the corner," replies Henry. Homer, Claude, Jim and Harold nudge each other and wink.

"Well," pursues the chief, "I don't see any reason why we should pay any attention to McCarl. He is a good fellow, though."

"Yes, but we're good fellows, too," Homer and Claude interrupt.

Judge Hull has been ignored up until this time. The chief turns suddenly to him: "What do you think, Judge?"

"Mr. President," he says. "Inasmuch as you see fit ask me, I don't think we do the country any good by continually bowling over this rule and that rule, by our talk of ignoring the Supreme Court, of ignoring all the checks which have been set up in this country. We become disturbed over the general mood of lawlessness and yet it is the example we give. It seems to be a very small matter between the Secretary of the Navy and the Controller General but when we establish rules why shouldn't the Government be the first to rigidly adhere to them?"

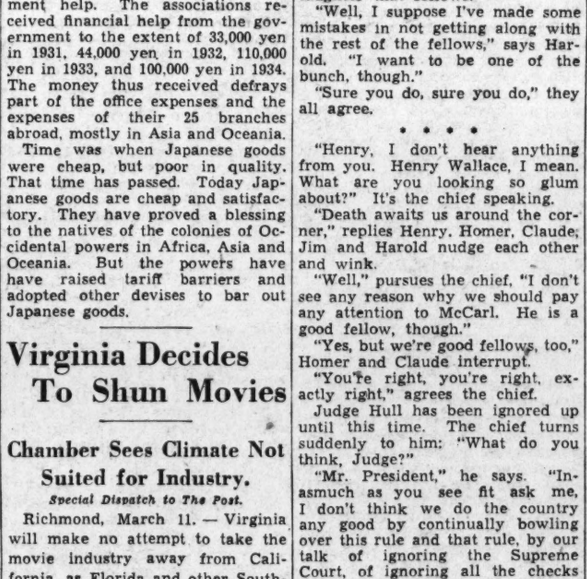
Homer and Claude burst out laughing. "Judge, you're just too serious for anything," they say. Then they all laugh except the judge.

"Come on, Judge, what's a rule among good fellows?" Homer and Claude taunt.

Oh, perhaps there is none," the judge replies wearily.

"Well, that's settled," says the chief. "We'll bowl McCarl over. He's a good fellow, though. In fact, I'll issue a statement to that effect."

The meeting ends with all save Judge and Henry singing: "We're jolly good fellows all."



"A little too much spring in that one, sir!"

Crime In The Golden Isle Of Mystery, And Crime In The Harsh Light Of Reality.

By Theodore Hall.

IN the first "Bulldog Drummond" movie, nothing captivated me so much as the thundering, rumbling roar of the high-powered car as it charged down the road in the fog. I remember it yet with a tingle. It seemed to hold all of the super-charged, opulent, rather sugary but pulse-stirring adventure in that Golden Isle of crime which is bounded on the north by John Buchan's heather-ranging heroes, on the south by a tall, pipe-smoking man in Baker street, on the west by Father Brown in country parishes, and on the east by Mr. Drummond himself.

How very attractive Messrs. Buchan, Doyle, Chesterton, and McNeile, and all their ink-pot cousins, have made the shot in the dark, the roaring getaway, the sure, Indian-footed pursuit of sleuth and supersleuth! Theirs is a land of adventure which any one of us would give his eye teeth to live in. The mere sight of a Dupont Circle street lamp in the fog is enough to set our imaginations loose and roving, and Drummond might be sitting on any park bench—hunched in his great coat, slit-eyed, and waiting.

But you'll put foot on the Golden Isle itself in H. C. McNeile's latest book—"Bulldog Drummond at Bay" (Doubleday Doran, $2). The great financier who balances the peace of Europe in his hand; the pacifist society with a sinister edge to it; the cry in the dark and the message hurled through the window; the gloomy house with the secret, sound-proof chamber within; yes, and even the dungeon with the baboon chained in the corner—here are all the trappings in which fictive England's brave investigator can foil the villains to best advantage.

A good, rousing, headlong, and cheerfully impossible yarn to keep you up some night.

• • • •

BUT we come down with a thud out of the Golden Isle of a story crime when we turn to the next book. Seen close to, by light of day, the mysterious shot and all its appurtenances are something else again—a bitter reality in which we are all by our membership in society, involved. Dr. Amos O. Squire's "Sing Sing Doctor" (Doubleday Doran, $2.50) makes that plain enough.

We have had prison books galore in recent months, but that must be no reason for overlooking this intimate and forcefully reasoned account of the criminal and his punishment.

Dr. Squire was for 25 years a consultant and chief physician at Sing Sing. During that time he knew the prisoners as only a doctor can—from their entrance up to the time, in 138 cases, when his stethoscope listened for the last heart beats in the death chamber. And of them, their crimes, their ways and habits, their spectacular escapes and their frenzied last hours, he tells a hundred stories. You can, if you haven't had your fill of such tales, read the book for that frank and rather lurid side.

BUT more interesting, because of the weight behind his words, are his conclusions upon punishment in general. Buttressed by case histories, he adds his voice to those who cry out that crime is a social maladjustment, a very definite kind of sickness which, like smallpox in the South Seas, falls dangerously upon the unprotected—in this instance, uncared-for and underprivileged youth. In almost every history of a prisoner, he found the mark of the slums.

Most of us are aware of that as a generality, but how it takes on flesh and sinew when he tells this little incident! Dr. Squire was congratulating a member of the Sing Sing football team which had just won a game, on his "clean" playing, and that seemed to please the man more than any of the other plaudits. "You know, Doc," he said, "if I'd had a chance to learn this game when I was a kid, I wouldn't be here now."

Nothing could be more pointed than his chapter on "Reclamation vs. Legal Vengeance." "In this warfare against criminals it is inevitable that there should be a feeling of revulsion for the enemy, and that he should be generally and inaccurately stigmatized as a wild, savage, ungrateful wretch or an unnatural, distorted madman. And so long as society persists in retaining in its criminal code an active element of vindictiveness, it must expect to continue to breed retaliation, hatred, distrust and fatalism on the part of the criminal."

As you can gather, he is dead set against capital punishment. We have, he notes, 12,000 murders a year in this country — and the chances are six to one that the murderer will not be arrested, twelve to one that he will not be convicted, and 121 to 1 that he will not be executed. Where, then, the deterrent of capital punishment? In all history it has never restrained crime—why, the most popular place for English pickpockets to work used to be the crowd at Tyburn, when they were hanging a pickpocket! No, our crime record is due, he asserts, to "inferior crime detection, sentimentality, and clever maneuvering by lawyers."

And though we realize that fact, and a dozen others which Dr. Squire likewise presents from his own observation, his sound and forthright book will nail them down in our consciousnesses.

• • • •

AFTER all our cracker-box judgments and the first court's decision on the Hauptmann case, we may want to run over the three years of tangles which led up to the climax. Sidney B. Whipple, able United Press reporter, who covered the case from the beginning, tells the complete story in "The Lndbergh Crime" (Blue Ribbon Books, $1).

Two items I'd missed before—that "John," sitting on the bench with "Jafsie," identified two safety-pins as those which had been in the cradle, and described the nursery to "Jafsie"—and that Wilentz noted (this is almost too pat) that the blue and red circles and the holes, the cipher on the ransom notes, could be read as blue for Bruno, red for Richard, and holes for Hauptmann.

After such a case, most of us will be very glad to go back to the Golden Isle of mystery. But the breeding of crime, for which we're all responsible, still seems to go on.

Queer, Isn't It?

By Wm. Lyon Phelps

I AM grateful to my readers who send me bits of interesting information on the English language. Bacon made a profound remark when he said "There is no excellent beauty that hath not some strangeness in the proportion." One reason for the great beauty of our English language is its strangeness as shown in the variety of pronunciations and the variety of meanings. Samuel T. Pearl, of Chicago, calls my attention to the following, which has been quoted elsewhere.

• • • •

You may call a woman a kitten, but you must not call her a cat.
You may call her a mouse, but you must not call her a rat.
You may call her a chicken, but you must not her a hen.
You may call her a duck, but you must not call her a goose.
You may call her a vision, but you must not call her a sight.

The first statement does not work with me, because I always use cat as a term of endearment, and have done so since I was a small child. But, then, I love cats.

Mr. P. Thomas O'Dea, of New Haven, sends me the following press cutting, entitled

Queer, Isn't It?

When the English tongue we speak,
Why is "break" not rhymed with "freak?"
Will you tell me why it's true
We say "sew," but likewise "few,"
And the maker of a verse
Can not cap his "horse" with "worse?"
"Beard" sounds not the same as "heard;"
"Cord" is different from "word;"
"Cow" is cow, but "low" is low;
'Shoe" is never rhymed with "foe."
Think of "hose" and "dose" and "lose,"
And of "goose" and yet of "choose."
Think of "comb" and "tomb" and "bomb,"
"Doll" and "roll" and "home" and "some."
And since "pay" is rhymed with "say,"
Why not "paid" with "said," I pray?
We have "blood" and "food" and "good;"
"Mould is not pronounced like "could."
Wherefore "done," but "gone" and "lone?"
Is there any reason known?
And, in short, it seems to me
Sounds and letters disagree.

Virginia Plans Survey of Road

Spotswood Trail Between Elkton and Hinton May Be Improved.

By the Associated Press.

Richmond, Va., March 11.—State Highway Commissioner Henry G. Shirley today said the highway department immediately would begin a survey of the section of Spotswood Trail between Elkton and Hinton.

The road is old and crooked, Commissioner Shirley told a delegation from Harrisonburg and Rockingham County calling upon him today in the interest of a better road there, "but whether we can get the money to do the job will depend upon the commission in its allocations for the next fiscal year." He estimated it would cost $500,000 dollars to put a first-class road over the stretch.

The commission will hold its allocation session for the year 1935-36 either in April or May. Meanwhile Mr. Shirley said the department's surveyors would be sent into the region "at least to survey a straight road over the 18-mile stretch between Elkton and Hinton."

Dr. S. P. Duke, president of the Harrisonburg State Teachers College and chairman of the Harrisonburg Chamber of Commerce committee on highways, was spokesman for the delegation, which contended principally that the road had been made even more inadequate by the heavy increase of traffic whcih followed the opening of Skyline Drive.

Sam R. Beard and the 12 men indicted with him on charges of violating the District's gaming laws will be tried March 25, it was decided in the District Supreme Court yesterday.

The charge against him is that he was operating a suite of rooms in a G street office building from which race track information was sent throughout the city.

Provisional Currency Stability Now Needed

Anglo-American Understanding Urged By Monetary Experts To Revive Trade.

By Elliott Thurston.

ONE thing that can be seen fairly clearly through the fogs besetting the mysteries of money is that the time is over-ripe for a provisional stabilization arrangement, with Great Britain alone, if not with others. The whole subject seems staggering to the layman and unhappily to most of officialdom, but at least the word of those experts who specialize in exploring the monetary mazes deserves some attention. And they generally agree that at least a provisional stabilization is as much or more needed now than about any other single step which could be taken to bring order out of the world's economic chaos.

Most of the experts agree that a return to gold in some allegedly modernized form is far in the future. That is, they agree that before there can be resumption of a full international gold standard, however modernized and readjusted against recurrence of the troubles of the past, several important things have to be settled. One is the war debts and reparations. Second is removal of the worst forms of trade barriers and exchange restrictions. Third is the question of undertakings among central banks to try to keep the value of gold more stable. There are others—questions of monetary management and of "flexibility," for instance. But these are all matters more for the future than the immediate present.

• • • •

MEANWHILE the case for an Anglo-American understanding grows steadily stronger. The present drop of the pound, due to a flight of capital because of political as well as economic uncertainties, illustrates anew the evils of exchange instability. Deflationary pressures are renewed upon France and the rest of the gold bloc. Inflationary forces on this side seize upon the situation to demand corresponding further devaluation of the dollar. The perilous cycle of competition between currencies, with all the accompanying new uncertainties, is stimulated.

The case for a provisional stabilization is stated again in "Monetary Policy and Economic Stabilization," a volume just published by MacMillan, from the pen of Arthur D. Gayer, of Columbia's economics staff, who explored the monetary mazes both abroad and at home and concludes that whatever the dilemmas for the future of gold, the present demands an interim action to which it is hard to see any logical—or even political—objections.

"Provisional exchange stabilization at an early date," he writes, "would assist in promoting business confidence. A quite informal, somewhat flexible understanding with America might go far toward effecting this end. The world need not wait until prices have risen to the full extent desirable for the restoration of internal equilibrium before undertaking exchange stabilization in any form.

"In most countries a vast basis for credit expansion exists today. If the business community needed still further assurance before making long-term commitments, governments could announce the intention of returning ultimately to a reformed international gold standard, whenever the conditions required for its successful operation had been fulfilled, and meanwhile of avoiding measures which cause needless international disturbances, such as recourse to competitive exchange depreciation."

• • • •

ARGUING that a "premature adoption of fixed parities would probably mean another breakdown of gold as a monetary standard," he emphasizes that there is no reason why there should not be a "preliminary period of experimental de facto stabilization," pending settlements and solutions before trying to get back to fixed parities.

"In the meanwhile," he states, "provisional exchange stabilization . . . between the world's leading currencies, and especially the dollar and sterling, would be most desirable for the restoration of confidence and the facilitation of international trade. . . . A firm and harmonious understanding between Great Britain and the United States so to control gold as to maintain its value stable would amount to something not far removed from stabilization of the world's gold price level, and would also insure stability of exchanges not merely between the dollar and sterling, but over virtually half the world, since it would include the countries with currencies linked respectively with these units. New York, Washington and London, working together, could thus do much to put a managed international gold standard into actual operation over a very large part of the globe."

While short of perfection this much at least would be steadying and encouraging. "Were agreement reached with the United States," adds Mr. Gayer, "to accept this policy and to collaborate in giving it practical application, the other countries which could be counted on also to adhere to it either gladly or by force of circumstance, would include on the one side the 'sterling area,' on the other, the Latin-America countries which have close financial relations with the United States. The former group covers the British Empire (despite some divergence of monetary interests between its constituent portions) with the exception of Canada, which, however, would present no difficulties since she occupies a middle position between the dollar and the pound; second, Scandinavia and Finland in Europe, and lastly, important parts of South America, conspicuously the Argentine."

EVEN the outcries of the devaluationists could be stilled by stressing the provisional nature of such an arrangement. And if it worked out as well as most of the authorities think, with resultant gains both in domestic and foreign trade, the reasons for the devaluationist lamentations would disappear altogether.

The Treasury, however, remains as silent as the tomb. Mr. Morgenthau has somewhat the look of a startled fawn when the dread subject of stabilization is mentioned. The New Deal still has soul scars left over from the London economic conference fiasco. Only a few subordinate officials make bold to whisper that perhaps a de facto stabilization would be in order—if the British would agree.

And they would have every reason to agree if only some brave spirit in the New Deal would first harken to the experts who ought to know and then come out, bluntly, and ask the British about it.

After the Winter Vacation.

Miami, Fla.—Your correspondent is pulling out of Miami, the Great Torn Ticket Territory, the Land of Fruits, Flowers and Form Charts. In his wake, pink slips bearing the words "Straight" rattle like autumn leaves in a breeze. Farewell to the dogs! Au revoir to the ponies!

• • • •

He came to see the orange groves and remained to study the form sheets. Veni, vidi, awah-h-h-h-!

• • • •

He is still a little confused and is inclined to speak of tropical foliage in terms of the races, and of the races in terms of flora and fauna. He finds it hard to look at an orange tree without wondering about its blood lines and its past performances, and there are still moments when he thinks "Grapefruit" the name of a horse.

It is high time your correspondent left the Great Straight-Place-and-Show Country. Things had reached a point where he would look at oleanders and ask the gardener what their best time was from seed to bud. To Col. Joseph Copps, the Dexter Fellowes of Florida, he had muttered, when asked to observe the beauties of a giant royal palm, "Do you think it's trying today?" One more week and he would have started chasing the mechanical rabbit.

Or visa versa.

Florida, we shall miss you! We shall miss the nonstop sunshine, the waving palms, the swish of opal waves on white beach, the caroling of tropical birds and the endless whisper of people talking to themselves. We shall miss the hibiscus, the oleanders and the steady footfalls of simple tourists hurrying to the $2 windows!

We shall miss the magic beauty of the Miami bay front viewed at night from the causeways, the exotic atmosphere of the ritzy hotel patios, the yellow "syrup" rising and falling on the Hialeah tote board, the sagacious opinions of the Delaney brothers and the daily Miami Herald reports of zero weather back home!

Thousands Are Competing This Week for School Championships.

With Saturday set as the deadline for entry of essay-bids for college scholarships, thousands of local, suburban and rural high school students are contending for school championships in the Second Washington Post Scholarship Competition this week.

Many principals are enlisting the aid of their local civic leaders to augment faculty juries in final selections. Each school champion will receive a handsome certificate of award from The Post and his or her essay will be considered in geographic division finals between March 16 and 31. The division winners will receive silver medals from The Post and will be entitled to compete in campus finals for the project's major award of eight four-year tuition scholarships offered by American, Catholic, Georgetown and Howard universities.

Hunger Rioters Spurn Food Gift In Oklahoma

500 Intrenched Citizens Refuse to Return Home Without Real Relief.

By the Associated Press.

McAlester, Okla., March 11.—A clamorous crowd of 500 men and women hunger demonstrators refused late today to accept food offered them by Gov. E. W. Marland on condition that they return to their homes.

"Give us the food at the courthouse or take it back to Oklahoma City," a committee of six, headed by A. L. Swinney, told Joe Brown, county relief administrator.

Two truck loads of food, bought by the Governor out of his own pocket and brought here by National Guardsmen, stood outside the courthouse. Inside, the jobless men and women, fed little since they gathered Saturday to demand more public relief, grew increasingly noisy.

"We've had too much order. We want some guns," one man shouted as the chairman pounded for order.

The courtroom was a scene of disorder as the men and women shouted their complaints and threats and clamored for recognition to speak. The crowd, however, had made no move to leave the courthouse.

"We're going to stay right here until we hear something definite from the Governor or the Legislature," the committee told Brown. "If we go home it might be a month before a case worker would get around to see us. Anyhow, what good will one day's rations do us?"

The crowd, which had dwindled to fewer than 200 at one time, swelled rapidly today as word spread that Gov. Marland had sent food.

Unemployment has been acute for years in this coal mining district.

At Oklahoma City a welfare board discussed plans for administration of $1,500,000 in relief money, voted recently by the Legislature. Due to lack of revenue and administrative machinery this money will not be available before April 1.

Posses Scour Virginia Wood For 6 Fugitives

Two of Escaped Convicts Reported Seen Near Fredericksburg.

Special Dispatch to The Post

Brock Road, Va., March 11.—Two of the four colored convicts who escaped from the prison truck a few miles from Fredericksburg were seen today by N. F. Houck on his farm near here. Tonight State prison guards with bloodhounds and posses of citizens scoured the woods for the men.

Mr. Houck said he was walking homeward when he recognized the men by their prison clothing. Not being armed he pretended not to see them and walked to his home, where he obtained a shotgun and fired five times in their direction.

Excitement reigned in this community, located on the Virginia Central Railroad, as farmers armed themselves and prepared to bolt doors after guards expressed the belief the convicts would seek food and other clothing.

Rain and lack of food is believed to have driven the felons from the woods in preparation for a getaway tonight. Only a few trains run over the railroad and it is believed the blowing of the whistles on one attracted the fugitives' attention. Guards planned to search the next train, which will pass early tomorrow.

Rudolph Jones, whose grocery store is in the section where the convicts escaped, said attempts were made to enter his store last night by some one who used a safety pin in an unsuccessful attempt to pick the lock.

Still another report came from T. O. Madden, at Lignum, Va., 10 miles from here, who said a man answering the description of Charles E. Beckner, one of the white convicts in the escape, inquired the direction to Brandy, Va., from him yesterday.

Reports of frequently attempted robberies were made by county residents who came here tonight to take part in the man-hunt.

In Richmond today, Maj. Rice Youell, superintendent of the State Penitentiary, predicted that at least five of the six men would be back in the penitentiary within six months. Except Thomas Bates, murdered, all are small-time crooks who can't keep out of trouble, Youell said.

Gen. F. S. Strong To Be Buried Here

Organizer of 40th Division to Rest in Arlington.

The body of Maj. Gen. Frederick S. Strong, U. S. A., retired, wartime commander of the Fortieth Division in California, who died Saturday after a brief illness at his home in San Diego, Calif., will be brought to Washington for burial in Arlington National Cemetery.

General Strong, who was 73-years-old, was born in Orchard Lake, Mich., and was graduated from West Point in 1880. He served in the last Indian wars in the West, and shortly before the World War he organized the Fortieth Division, in Camp Kearny, Calif., and commanded it until it was demobilized after the war. He retired with the rank of major general in 1919.

In 1906, when he was assistant inspector of artillery attached to the War Department, Gen. Strong lived in Washington.

He is survived by his wife and a son, Frederick S. Strong, jr. Funeral services will be held in San Diego tomorrow.

Auto Bill Delay Draws Attack Of Mrs. Norton

'Mayoress' Flays Patman for Holding Up Action on Safety Measure.

By James D. Secrest.

House action on the District motorists' safety-responsibility bill was blocked again late yesterday, and "the lady mayor of Washington" let loose one of the finest Irish tempers on Capitol Hill against the member chiefly responsible for the delay.

With super-charged words, Representative Mary T. Norton, chairman of the House District Committee, came to the defense of Washington's legislative rights, flayed District detractors, and concluded by pointing out that the incident emphasized the lack of suffrage in the Nation's Capital.

Representative Wright Patman (Democrat), of Texas, was the member who for the second time this session prevented a vote on the auto liability bill, and it was against him chiefly that Mrs. Norton directed her remarks.

As a result of his action and the kindness of the District Committee chairman in permitting House leaders to push the income tax publicity repeal bill ahead, yesterday was District Day in name only. Not a single District bill was brought to the floor.

Speaker Byrns was one of the first of a dozen members to rush to the committee table and apologize to Mrs. Norton after the House had adjourned in a turmoil.

"The lady was so kind in yielding to my request that the 'pink slip' bill come first," he said, "that I am extremely sorry this occurred. If I can possibly do so, I will give you another day before District day, two weeks hence."

After adjournment, Mrs. Norton issued a statement placing the responsibility for the continuing increase in District traffic accidents on the House because of its tardiness in acting on the safety responsibility bill.

Tells of Insurance Lobby.

She spoke of reports that an active lobby, backed by insurance and certain cab interests, has been doing its utmost to persuade members of the House to oppose the bill unless the mandatory insurance for taxicabs was added.

"Yet, it is peculiar," she said, "that only one person opposing the bill has been to see me, though I am chairman of the District Committee."

Placing the responsibility for continued auto accidents on those responsible for blocking the bill, she said:

"This condition would not be tolerated in any city that had the franchise. If we must consider the interests of the Washington cab interests first, then it's time for the citizens of Washington to rise up and protest."

The trouble all began when, at about 4:15 p. m., Mrs. Norton was given the floor, and District day officially began. She had been waiting patiently in the House lobby since shortly after noon, assembling her arguments.

Her first request was for unanimous consent that the House resolve itself into a committee of the whole for consideration of the auto liability bill.

Patman Calls for Delay.

Patman immediately jumped to his feet and announced that he had been informed a compulsory taxicab insurance amendment would be offered and that consequently he believed the bill should be held over until hearings could be held on the amendment.

Mrs. Norton replied that she had no objection to any member offering a taxicab insurance bill as a separate measure, but that the motorists' responsibility bill should "stand on its own bottom."

She also reminded Patman that he, as chairman of the sub-committee which handled the bill, had had plenty of time to hold hearings on the taxicab insurance feature and that he should properly have brought the matter up before the House District Committee.

The broad-shouldered Texan, who on the previous District day had asked postponement so he might make a speech outside the halls of Congress, insisted he wanted the bill passed, but that he feared the taxicab amendment might be attached.

Mrs. Norton Indignant.

"It would have shown better grace on the part of the gentleman from Texas to have brought this matter up before the committee," Mrs. Norton observed as her eyes flashed and her face flushed with restrained anger.

"I've never known of another House committee to be treated like this."

During the discussion, Representative Hull (Progressive), of Wisconsin, one of the District Committee members who has tried to attach the taxi insurance amendment, complained that further hearings had been promised after the bill was held up two weeks ago. They were not held.

Finally, as the confusion increased and after Patman had objected both to the original unanimous consent request and a second request for an hour's division of time, Representative Maverick (Democrat), of Texas, moved to adjourn. The vote was carried by a standing vote after Acting Majority Leader Taylor had proposed a call of the House.

Lobbying on Bill Increases.

Seldom has a District bill aroused as much interest and led to such lobbying as has the motorists' safety responsibility bill. With each week's delay the lobbying has increased, reputedly backed by insurance firms and rental taxicab companies which would be able to sell insurance to the cab buyers if the insurance were made mandatory.

Several members of the House District Committee have succumbed to this lobby, somewhat belatedly, and are now insistent that the taxicab amendment be attached.

The bill, as now drafted, would place the same safety responsibility upon taxicab drivers as upon the lay auto driver. The House passed the bill last year and the Senate this year. The House also voted down a taxicab insurance bill last session.

Greif Workers Bar Unionists

Hundreds Keep Organized Labor Group Out of Virginia Plant.

By the Associated Press.

Staunton, Va., March 11.—Anti-unionists today prevented garment union members from going to their posts in the Greif Clothing Co. mills here, and then went about their own duties in the plants.

Two score employes, said by the antiunionists to be members of the union, were blocked out of the plants by several hundred anti-unionists. The picketing was peaceful, and those banned left without attempting to use force.

Negotiations for bringing the opposing factions together were under way over the week-end, but no announcement as to the result was forthcoming today.

There has been unrest at the plants since Tuesday.

Audit Upholds Expense Listed In Shenandoah

All Funds of Park Group Accounted For, Downs Tells Peery.

By the Associated Press.

Richmond, Va., March 11.—State Auditor L. McCarthy Downs today reported to Gov. Peery that he had found all funds of the first Virginia conservation and development commission were accounted for, but the records kept were difficult to analyze because of inadequate information on vouchers.

Citing a 1928 statute, Auditor Downs criticized allowances as high as 24 cents a mile for automobile operation, but found nothing illegal in any of the numerous expenses aggregating $366,782.12 spent in promoting Shenandoah Park by means of parties in Richmond and elsewhere. These were listed for the Governor as "unusual" items. The figure included the expenditure of $31,797.01 at Hoover Camp and on the nearby public school which Mrs. Hoover sponsored.

The old commission was headed by William E. Carson, of Riverton, who served without salary. It showed that he did not draw the $10 per diem allowed commission members on official duty. His traveling expenses for the period of the audit were totaled at $14,358. The audit covered the entire life of the old commission.

The report showed that the General Assembly appropriated $1,000,000 and the public, including John D. Rockefeller, jr., and Henry Ford, subscribed $1,245,209.17 toward acquirement of park lands. It showed further that the 181,578.7 acres of park lands acquired cost $1,847,244.63. The condemnation expenses aggregated $61,000, plus $29,000 for legal services.

The legal item embraced $7,500 paid former Judge A. C. Carson, brother of the former chairman.

The report showed that subsequently Judge Carson was paid an additional $1,166 for a special assignment by Attorney General A. P. Staples.

The Cape Henry Seaside Park was reported to the Governor as not owned by the State. The report said it will not be owned by the State until a $260,000 option is taken up by action of the Legislature.

The auditor called the attention of the Governor to his opinion that State money may not be spent on the seaside park until the State actually owns the property now held by real estate companies who can ask under contract for $13,000 for renewing the option in 1936.

Evidence of Coal in 'Meteorite' Casts Doubt on Authenticity

Physicist Says Fuel Would Have Burned in Fall to Maryland Farm.

By the Associated Press.

Chestertown, Md., March 11.—Doubt has been cast upon the authenticity of a 200-pound purported meteorite, uncovered on the farm of John Usilton, near Rock Hall, during a recent snow storm, because of evidence of soft coal in the mass.

Jesse J. Coop, Washington College physicist, who reported finding signs of the coal, said this substance would have been burned quickly by friction if the big mass had fallen from the sky. Prof. Coop added he also found pieces of clinker in the bulk.

He commented that if the fragment were a genuine meteorite, it would constitute a major scientific discovery, since it contained seashells and would indicate definitely life exisists on another sphere. In order that a definite conclusion may be reached, he has sent the mass to the Philadelphia Academy of Natural Sciences for further study.

In arguing that it is real, Usilton points to a fence post he asserts was burned by the falling fragment. Prof. Coop said that if it is not a real meteorite, the post must have been burned in some other way.

Homeless Strip of Virginia Land Has Never Reported Its Births

County and City Looked Upon It as Part of the Other, Is Belief.

By the Associated Press.

Richmond, Va., March 11.—There is a strip of territory in Spotsylvania County between Fredericksburg and the Rappahannock River, in the direction of Falmouth—containing scores of houses — from which births and other vital statistics have never been reported to the State department of health.

This statement was made today by Dr. W. A. Plecker, director of the division of vital statistics, who sent his assistant, Miss Estelle Marks and a squad of five workers into the strip to make a house-to-house canvass for statistics.

Dr. Plecker said he believed the Fredericksburg registrar had never reported statistics for the strip because it was in the county, and the county registrar apparently looked upon it as a part of the city.

In all probability, Dr. Plecker said, marriages in the area have been recorded in Fredericksburg city hall, and many of the deaths have been reported by doctors and undertakers, but so far as he knows the births have never been reported.

The Results of a Year's Balloting Disclose the "Ten Best Plays of All Time"

Majority Came Along in Last Sixteen Years

Voters Have Youth's View; Filmusicals Take Lead; Amusement Jottings.

(Reprinted from Yesterday's Last Edition.)

By Nelson B. Bell.

Memories of the theater evidently are short-lived.

This conclusion is forced upon one by the results of a year-long investigation of the matter of American taste in its theatricals, published no longer ago than last Saturday—day before yesterday—by the gentleman who engineered it.

It was in March, 1934, that Ward Morehouse, author, editor and playwright, who, when he is not engaged in the eager enterprise of composing a "Gentlemen of the Press," or some comparably moving whimsy, dedicates his brilliant talents to keeping an eye on "Broadway After Dark" for the New York Sun, started a round-robin soliciting the country's great and near-great to commit themselves as to "the ten favorite plays of your lifetime."

The publication of the selections began a year ago this month with the list submitted by George M. Cohan, first gentleman of the American theater. It has been going on ever since, until Saturday, when the grand finale appeared in the columns of the Sun in the form of a list of the ten plays of all time that America deems best—or at least that considerable segment of America's culture represented by a mailing list that included prominent playwrights, novelists, actors, producers, publishers, critics, educators and business men.

The "All-Time Best."

A compilation of votes cast in the 300 lists that were returned to Mr. Morehouse during the year reveals the following as the champion plays encountered in the lifetimes of the voters:

"Hamlet" .....80 votes
"Rain" .....64 votes
"What Price Glory" .....46 votes
"Cyrano de Bergerac" .....44 votes
"Peter Pan" .....41 votes
"The Jest" .....40 votes
"The Green Pastures" .....40 votes
"Journey's End" .....36 votes
"Reunion in Vienna" .....30 votes
"The Cherry Orchard" .....25 votes

My quarrel with this, if any, would be that it represents too modern a viewpoint to be acceptable as a list of the "ten best plays of all time."

I do not believe that a majority of the ten best plays of all time have been produced within the last 16 years, although that is not only the implication, but the flat declaration of the listings posted above. Sixty per cent of the plays voted best have been produced since the year 1919. In all the history of the theater, then, only four of the ten best had been written and produced prior to that!

The plays that have been produced since 1919 from the approved list are "Rain," "What Price Glory," "The Jest," "The Green Pastures," "Journey's End" and "Reunion in Vienna."

Many Fine Plays Omitted.

The voting, necessarily, brought out a widespread preference for plays not accorded a place in the final list of ten by a comprehensive recapitulation of the balloting, but the fact remains that the poll discloses a point of view to be expected only among those whose ages have not as yet carried them out of the 30s or very early 40s.

As I glance over the long list of distinguished ladies and gentlemen who participated in Mr. Morehouse's symposium of thoughtful appraisal, I am constrained to the belief that at least a few of them have been around sufficiently long to know their way about in an older theater than their selections betray!

At any rate, it was a good game, while it lasted, and no doubt afforded Mr. Morehouse keen satisfaction by the size and distinction of the vote which it attracted. I am grateful to him for having included this desk in his poll and for having both wired me of the finals and mailed me a tear-sheet setting forth in full the final results.

May his shadow never grow less nor very much greater, either, unless he has been doing his daily dozen more regularly than I suspect since last I saw him.

So from Master Hardie Meakin, manager of RKO-Keith's—just in case you hadn't heard—comes the following ebullient westernunion which has the additional advantage of being prepaid: "'Roberta' breaking all records. Attendance records for both Friday and Saturday topped, and today, so far, we are ahead of everything, including 'Little Women,' 'It Happened One Night,' 'Count of Monte Cristo,' etc. Outstanding feature is that patrons are applauding Astaire, Rogers and Dunne after their dances and song numbers just as legitimate theater patrons would do. Looks as if 'Roberta' will be with us for a long time." (And let this be a lesson to you in punctuation and quotation marks, westernunion!)

Your wire, Mr. Meakin, does not surprise us in the slightest, Mr. Meakin. "Roberta" is that sort of a picture and we both knew it the minute you'd run off that preview over at the Fox Film Exchange Wednesday. Nice going.

Another Is on Way.

While Master Meakin may be first in recent realization, he is not alone in anticipation of handsome emoluments at the box office from the mass appeal of a distinguished filmusical.

In the penultimate episode of a fashionable evening, to which the grimy commentators upon such things were bidden, more or less, through the side door, there was revealed on Friday night one of the most successful essays at translating operetta into exceptional film entertainment that the cinema has been able to negotiate to date.

This, needless to say, was the practically 1 a. m. preview screening of "Naughty Marietta," the Victor Herbert musical gem, based on an original story by Rida Johnson Young, in which Jeanette MacDonald and Nelson Eddy, appearing in the roles of primary vocal importance, supported by Frank Morgan, Elsa Lanchester (Mrs. Charles Laughton) and others of like importance, charmed an exclusive, invited audience that sat until 3 a. m., literally enthralled by the great lyrical and visual beauty, Producer Hunt Stromberg, Director W. S. Van Dyke and Photographer William Daniels have succeeded in imparting to this memorable vehicle for the high gifts of Emma Trentini and Orville Harrold, who first appeared in the pivotal roles on the stage.

Is Magnificently Sung.

Granting the easy superiority of the perceptive Mr. Van Dyke's direction, the most impressive attribute of this extraordinarily brilliant achievement in establishing music as as much a part of the cinema as speech, is the singing of Miss MacDonald and Mr. Eddy. Some of their numbers were "stepped up" a little as to volume Friday night—because the machines were set for a full house instead of a practically empty one—but so magnificently done were such old favorite songs as "Tramp, Tramp, Tramp," "I'm Falling in Love With Someone," "Sweet Mystery of Life," "Chansonette" and other gems of the Herbert score that those in attendance burst spontaneously into enthusiastic and prolonged applause, just as Mr. Meakin states his audiences are doing at RKO-Keith's.

This applause would have been just as spontaneous and prolonged had not Mr. Van Dyke, Mr. Eddy, Mr. Stromberg and others of note in the field of motion pictures—including Mr. and Mrs. Martin Johnson—been present. With them there, it was a rather more gala occasion than such things usually are.

And "Naughty Marietta" will be almost that gala, no matter where, or under what circumstances, you view it. It is a superlative accomplishment.

The motion picture industry, at last, has demonstrated some slight degree of proficiency in the manly art of self-protection. That is to say, at least one of the pioneer producers has.

It will be recalled that this space recently reproduced Papa Carl Laemmle's stinging castigation of those who persist in announcing the sale of Universal Pictures Corporation to this, that or the other purchaser. It was, I believe, on the very night of the day we carried Mr. Laemmle's denial that a West Coast movie-gossip, radio commentator stated unequivocally that Universal has been sold to the Warner Brothers. Both Mr. Laemmle and Harry M. Warner, president of his company, hotly denied the statement next morning. So last week on his appointed night of broadcasting studio and film colony chatter, the radio commentator who had made the misstatement took it completely back.

Usually, the pictures have taken it lying down. Papa Laemmle, however, as the old "trust" of 30 years, or so, ago could have told you, is not like that. He broke the trust 'way back there and, I understand, eats broadcasters every breakfast for appetizers!

Time Is Turned Back.

I reprint the following interesting letter in the thought that it will bring as much pleasure to readers of The Post as it has to me:

Dear Mr. Bell: Sincere thanks for your recent column of recollections of the Columbia. Naturally, you did not attempt a complete history, but I think that those who, like myself, have lived in Washington for a considerable period, will instinctively supplement your memories by others of interest—at least to themselves.

First, one always recalls the gentleman who managed the Columbia for a long time—Mr. Fred Berger, because he had the art of making the occupant of even the cheapest seat feel as though he were a personal and privileged guest. I have no wish to involve The Post in a libel suit, but I do feel that Washington would be a more pleasant place in which to seek dramatic entertainment if other managers in this regard could more fully emulate the examples of the late Mr. Berger and of Mr. Stoddard Taylor in their attitude toward those who buy tickets at the box office.

Then, too, the orchestra of the old Columbia was far more than a handful of bored individuals achieving a minimum of effect with an equal minimum of effort. If my memory be correct, the late Capt. Santlemann, of the Marine Band, for a time honored the narrow pit below the now dingy proscenium panels with their dimming legend: COLUMBIA.

Recalls Mansfield.

As a schoolboy, I recall Richard Mansfield gave one of his more spectacular efforts at the Columbia and the stage was so small that a nearby storeroom was pressed into service, with the result that scenery and properties was dragged in and out through the main lobby at intermissions and before and after the performances.

Sometime during the first Administration of Theodore Roosevelt, the then surviving member of that illustrious partnership—Robson and Crane—revived the "Comedy of Errors." At a matinee the antics of a box party of White House youngsters rivaled the capers of both Dromios.

But the curtains of the Columbia have also been slowly lowered on tragic masterpieces. Years ago, Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson, in one of his first American tours as an independent star, found a version of Kipling's "Light That Failed" rather devoid of box office illumination and he hastily substituted, in Washington at least, his never-to-be-forbotten and priceless "Hamlet."

Much later, our own Charles B. Hanford engaged the Columbia for repertoire. I saw him in "Othello;" production meager but the acting good. One scene taxed imagination to the extent of a row of obviously new barrels cross stage—the teeming trade of Venice, if you please. One barrel was upset, rolled to the footlights and revealed to the faithful few the stencil: "Sanitary Grocery Co., Wash. D. C."

From the same stage Edith Wynne Matthison, by her matchless elocution and repressed artistry, took a modern audience from the present through the middle ages and almost to the realms of eternity itself by the medium of the timeless "Morality of Everyman."

A word in passing for two triumphs of the exquisite Bertha Galland, who, about 1904 or 1905, gave the "School for Scandal" and "Romeo and Juliet," the latter comparable, it seems to me, with the interpretation of Julia Marlowe at her best and with what critics agree as to Katharine Cornell. The charm and stage presence of Miss Galland always suggested to me a combination of the most delightful moments of Maude Adams and of Viola Allen.

Star Averted Panic.

Percy Haswell (Mrs. George Fawcett) who was deservedly a favorite for several seasons in Baltimore, was more than once, a welcome guest at the Columbia. You no doubt recall that William Winter credited to her one of the finest performances of "Midsummer Night's Dream" within his ken. The production was mounted so inexpensively that any movie magnate would be incredulous that so much could be done for so little money.

The cynical answer to the riddle is: Brains. At the Columbia Miss Haswell produced Marshall's "Royal Family," a delightful comedy, not to be confused with a later play and moving picture of the same title anent contemporary theatrical notables. The performance I have in mind was not long after the Iroquois disaster in Chicago. Audiences were still a bit timid and, by exceptional presence of mind, Miss Haswell averted a panic from a fire scare which, after all was over, seemed almost absurd. A lady passing through the lobby swept up a cigarette stump—it was the day of long skirts—and once in her seat she discovered a fire somewhere in the distant suburbs of her ample costume. Her screams were in inverse ratio to the real peril, but the audience began a stampede. Miss Haswell quieted the frightened folk and most serenely went on with the play, which the season before has been a starring vehicle for the delightful Annie Russell, one of the favorites at the turn of the century.

After all, a real theater is more than a structure of marble and garish decorations; it is a place where the kindly alchemy of time transmutes the shabbiest auditorium into a treasure house of memories and dreams. By that standard the Columbia is a real theater. Sincerely,

(Signed) JAMES W. BERRY,
3900 Legation street northwest.

Ol' Man River Note.

Speaking of sure-fire musicals, as we have been more or less in these vagrant observations, Paramount has one coming along in "Mississippi," according to all reports, with W. C. Fields, Joan Bennett, Bing Crosby, Queenie Smith, Gail Patrick and a few more holding the torch high.

"Mississippi" was delta star cast, sort of, as you might say!

Is Sought for Role on the Stage

In casting about for an alluring lead for a gigantic extravaganza he purports to present on a circus scale under the title of "Jumbo," Billy Rose has permitted his eye to fall upon Patricia Ellis, one of the cinema's more talented blondes, whose latest likeness appears above. Another proselyte from the film colony for this new item, with book and lyrics by Ben Hecht and Charles MacArthur and music by Richard Rodgers and Lorenz Hart, is expected to be Jimmy Durante, who, of course, would be the ace clown. Miss Ellis, by the way, this year is occupying the Burton Holmes mansion, Topside, in Hollywood.

"GEMS OF BURLESQUE." Independent Burlesque Association production in two acts and 24 scenes, with Mike Sachs, Earl Root, Floyd Hallicy, Bobby Gordon, Frank Smith, Alice Kennedy, Billy Lamont, Marie Allely, Ann La Morris, Peggy Hill, the Mack Sisters, and the Dancing Bryanettes. Book by Gus Fiala; dances routined by Frank Bryant. Staged by James J. Lake. Reviewed Sunday matinee by W. A. Whitney.

Working in rare form, Mike Sachs and Frank Smith are the most dazzling sparklers in a notable array of "Gems of Burlesque." Indeed, so effective did they work at yesterday's opening performance that the rest of the show lost some of the impressiveness that is manifestly possessed by the feminine members of the company, as well as by the supporting comedians.

Although favorites with Ninth street audiences for a long time, Sunday afternoons have never seen the Messrs. Sachs and Smith work so spontaneously or be so excruciatingly funny as yesterday.

Keeping the audience continuously in an appreciative uproar, Mr. Sachs proves himself not only a master at handling farcical lines but also in utilizing eyes, mouth and hands with telling pantomimic effect. And when he teams up, in his third appearance, with Bobby Gordon, he virtually slays his listeners.

Tangle-talking Frank Smith is no less in top form. From the first crack out of the bag he convulses the audience with gags—some new, some old, but all provocative of deep-seated guffaws.

Beauty on Display.

On the distaff side, the top would in all probability, be titian-topped Peggy Hill, with Ann LaMorris and Marie Allely running close seconds. All three of the display artistes handle their tantalizing routines with finesse, leaving little to be desired from this department of modern burlesque.

The Mack Sisters—Shirley and Billie—are seen in acrobatic routines, and Lucille Wayne does a nice slow tap number. Alice Kennedy sings, and, while she is no Grace Moore, does her best work in a couple of excerpts from "Madame Butterfly." Billy LaMont is the soubrette.

Back on the male side again, Earl Root and Floyd Hallicy are the straight men and furnish the barytone and tenor warbling.

The Dancing Bryanettes are easy to look at and give a good account of themselves in Frank Bryant's ensemble creations, staged by the fine Italian hand of the old master, Jimmie Lake.

National Symphony Orchestra in Constitution Hall; Hans Kindler, conductor. Wagner program: Introduction to Act III, Dance of Apprentices, Entrance of the Guilds, Homage to Hans Sachs from "Die Meistersinger von Nuernberg;" Preludes to Acts I and III of "Lohengrin;" Finale from "Goetterdaemmerung;" Good Friday Spell from "Parsifal;" "Traeume;" Overture to "Tannhaeuser."

In defiance of weather discouraging to attendance, one of the largest audiences of the season assembled for Dr. Kindler's second Wagnerian matinee and bestowed more than generous applause upon the musicians for their excellencies in performance. As the current series of concerts draws toward its close, one observes with satisfaction that there is no surcease of zeal in the orchestra, that its responsiveness becomes ever more sensitive and that its eloquence grows more glowing. It has attained the self-confidence which denotes a thoroughly integrated organism.

It was a happy thought that led Dr. Kindler to begin the program with selections from Wagner's most ebulliently joyous score, in which there are no shadows save from the little cloud of melancholy that passes over Hans Sachs as he realizes that he has reached the age of renunciation. That dimimng of light is so transitory and so irradiated with the beauty of tranquillity that one is scarcely aware that it has come and gone. One commends the orchestra for the admirable reading of those brooding passages.

It has been remarked that the dance of the apprentices is the only waltz in all of Wagner's discursive works. While he was about it, he made that waltz completely German in character and perfectly in keeping with the period of the action. It has none of the languor and sentiment of the Viennese waltz, but trips neatly on its way.

Dr. Kindler's well-built program gave us glimpses of the Lohengrin legend, the epitome of "Tannhaeuser" in the overture, the foreshadowing of "Tristan and Isolde" in the familiar "Dreams," the lovely section of "Parsifal" in which Nature is transformed under the spell of Good Friday, and the tremendous closing of the tetralogy. It was a concert enjoyable in all its phases, and the orchestra, flexible and sympathetic, was at its best.

The Gossipel Truth

Hollywood, March 10.

NELSON EDDY is really singing his love songs to Gypsy Norman, a gal who came all the way from Honolulu, where the romance started . . . Max Reinhardt wants to make a picture of "The Miracle" with Greta Garbo. He is very friendly with Garbo, and she is very interested . . . Grace Moore has had a cold, and recording on her flicker was held up for two days. It is now called, "Love Me Forever" . . . Ida Lupino was married when she was 15 years old; the marriage was quickly annulled and Ida won't mention his name . . . Josef von Sternberg and Ernst Lubitsch had hot words concerning "The Devil Is a Woman," but Von Sternberg refused to make any retakes . . . Von Sternberg's contract is through and he has checked out at Paramount . . . Ketti Gallian took a female dramatic coach with her when the "Gaucho Lover" troupe went away on a two-week's' location trip . . . Every one has been betting on the horses at Santa Anita to win by a nose. Therefore, when a nag named Eisenberg ran every one bet heavily, for if any horse should win by a nose it's one named Eisenberg.

Josef Verner Reed tells his startling adventures in the theater in "The Curtain Falls," the most discussed book in theatricals today. Reed's partner in his theatrical exploits was Kenneth MacGowan, who is not spared in the book. Since Mr. MacGowan was present at every incident related in the yarn, I believed his opinion of the book, especially as to its authenticity, would be interesting. Mr. MacGowan said: "There is only one incident in the book which is not exactly correct, and that is the Katharine Hepburn one. I wanted her, let her out because Author Benn Levy didn't like her, but told her to stand ready and then didn't conscientiously look for another player, and thus Hepburn had to be rehired. Otherwise, the book is true, although high points are dramatized."

MURIEL EVANS' honey—she has been trying to keep his name a secret—is the wealthy New Yorker, Marshall Worester. He is in Hollywood keeping her company . . . George Kaufman and Morrie Ryskind have completed the script of the Marx brothers' flicker, "A Night at the Opera," and the Marx men will play a condensed version of it in vaudeville for four weeks to try out the jokes . . . Lawrence Tibbett is wanted for this picture to do the real singing in it . . . Lila Lee and Jack Peine have definitely decided to get a divorce, and so have Pat Bellamy, a Busby Berkeley cutie, and Billie Gordon, assistant casting director at Paramount.

The Dick Powell-Mary Brian romance has cooled and now they are just friends . . . Carl Laemmle, jr., threw a party to which he invited only Pasadena society debutantes. He said he was tired of romancing movie actresses . . . The Frank R. Adamses expect a baby . . . The day the story appeared that Al Smith was to take charge of the RKO studio, they looked to see how many brown derbies were in the wardrobe department and decided it wasn't true.

MAE WEST has given herself a new diamond bracelet that big . . . Edward Robinson and Warners are battling and will come to a contract settlement . . . Jack Haley had his shirt and suit stolen at Fox, and work on "Redheads on Parade" was delayed half a day until a new costume was made to match the one Haley wore in that sequence . . . Robert Taylor, the new Metro player scheduled for stardom, and Irene Hervay are a heat wave . . . Pat de Cicco and Billie Seward are Club Trocadering . . . Considering the number of relatives in the picture business, they may change the name from cinema to kinema.

After trying for a year to get a scenario for "The Broadway Melody," one was finally completed last week by Sid Silvers and Jack McGowan. Immediately after it was accepted, Jack Benny was signed for the flicker—and now the scenario has to be written again to fit Benny. He will play a Broadway columnist . . . Miriam Hopkins, after finishing "Becky Sharp," will fly to New York because the real boy friend is there . . . Warners are buying a new story . . . "The Good Fairy' is proving to be a bad box office title, and because Universal won't change it, the theater marquees advertise it in this manner: "'The Good Fairy'—don't let the title fool you."

$14,000 Award In Damage Suits

Compromise Effected in Harrisonburg Action Against Spitzer.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Harrisonburg, Va., March 11.—Judgments totaling $14,000 against Carl Spitzer, jr., of Mayland, Va., for injuries to three persons in an automobile collision on the Valley Pike, north of here, in November, 1933, were ordered entered in the Rockingham Circuit Court today after attorneys agreed on a compromise.

This is the largest sum ever involved in an automobile accident settlement here. Spitzer's insurance company paid the claims.

Harry L. Martin, University of Virginia, football star, was allowed $6,150 in the compromise. A jury previously awarded him $8,000. Miss Irene Ring, of Woodstock, was awarded $2,780; Miss Margaret Piggott, $2,570, and Mrs. Mary Piggott, her mother, $2,500.

Martin's football career was ended as a result of the accident and he and Misses Piggott and Ring received serious injuries. All three passed considerable time in hospitals and spent much money for treatment. Misses Ring and Piggott and Martin were en route to Woodstock for the week-end. Spitzer was driving in the opopsite direction and is alleged to have attempted to turn into the Mayland road without giving a signal.

Miss Piggott's suit for $5,000 was in progress today when the compromise was reached. The insurance company noted an appeal after the Martin verdict, but nothing was done and the settlement effected today.

Mrs. Brock Honor Guest At Luncheon

Mrs. George Entertains for Wife of Former Senator.

Many Events Planned for Her During a Visit of Week.

By Evelyn Peyton Gordon.

Capital society, and particularly congressional groups, are delighted to welcome again Mrs. William E. Brock, wife of former Senator Brock, of Chattanooga, Tenn., who is passing a week with Senator and Mrs. Walter F. George, of Georgia, in their apartment at the Mayflower.

While Senator Brock was in Congress, he and his wife made their home at the Carlton, and she was one of the most popular members of the Senate set.

Mrs. George entertained yesterday at a large luncheon for her guest. The table was decorated with jonquils, pink rosebuds, and blue iris, effectively combined with maidenhair fern arranged in bowls placed at intervals the length of the long table. Delicately colored tapers and a spun sugar pagoda at each end of the table completed the decorations. Mrs. Brock wore a smart black crepe frock with an interesting neckline trimmed with white, and a small black hat. Mrs. George was in a gown of black with a blouse of gold lame, and a black hat.

Ft. Myer Plans Show March 26

Horse Events Scheduled as Result of Interest in February Program.

The enthusiastic response to the indoor horse show held at the Riding Hall, Fort Myer, Va., last month, has caused Col. Kenyon Joyce, commanding officer at Fort Myer, and the committee in charge of arrangements, consisting of Lieut. Col. George S. Patton, jr., Capt. James T. Duke, Capt. Marion Carson, and Lieut. Joseph Ganahl, to plan a second show of greater interest on March 26, at 8 o'clock.

Skin Texture Made Smooth By This Cream

Face Revitalized Through Irradiating Ingredients in Preparation.

By Ruth Anne Davis.

HUNDREDS of women want to improve their skins but lack of knowledge or just plain inertia keeps them from putting forth the required effort. For it does take effort. A skin isn't going to change overnight from a sallow coarse condition to a smooth, satin-like whiteness. But it can be coaxed. That's the encouraging part. However, so few of us have the patience to be consistent in our treatments that a great many times we believe they are fruitless before we've given them a fair trial.

There is, however, a certain irradiated skin food that works rather rapidly. You musn't expect miracles overnight nor feel that your complexion should turn from good to bad in one week. But if you follow directions, and use the cream persistently—and consistently—for at least two weeks, you're bound to see an improvement.

This preparation is particularly good for coarse texture skins, or those that look tired and sluggish. If you have a mild acne condition, it's good for that, too, but remember it takes real perseverance to improve long-standing cases of this type.

There are two reasons why this cream is such a dependable complexion aid. First, it is irradiated with vitalizing, health-giving ultra-violet rays. Second, it contains rich, nourishing oils.

Easily Washed Collar.

While the average shopper has no difficulty finding collars, she'd like to buy, the business woman faces a greater problem. She wants a collar that is easy to launder, one that will not show soil after the first wearing. She wants one that is plain and tailored, but at the same time has a definite femininity. Many collars she finds are so pleated and deruffled that it's virtually impossible to launder them without marring their appearance.

If the business woman will stop by the neckwear department of a downtown store she will find that some attractive homespun collars are just what she's been wanting. These come in two styles. One has a pleated jabot and a small turnover collar. The other is Peter Panish, with a small, jaunty bow at the neck. Both are trimmed in genuine Irish lace in the rose pattern. They are available in peach, blue and white.

Loofah Back Washer.

Keep the skin on your back soft and free from pimples by using one of the back washers featured in a downtown store. These are long strips of coarse loofah. Each end is designed for an easy grasp so that you can pass the washer back and forth, slappity-slap across your back. It works up circulation, takes off the dead skin, removes the soil, and frees the skin from all extraneous matter likely to cause blackheads, pimples and rough places.

Many otherwise beautifully groomed women detract from their appearance by neglecting their backs. No matter how devastating the evening dress, it's effect is cut in half by an unfortunate skin condition.

Don't Hide Hand Beauty.

Don't hide your hand beauty. Literally uncover it by using an especially fine handmask.

This is the product of a woman who perhaps leads all others in the field of hand preparations. When she created the mask she was seeking something that would enable a woman to release her hands from their dishpan-dusting cloth aspect in a few minutes. Her success has been fervently acclaimed.

The mask has a smoothing, softening and whitening effect. Because it stimulates circulation, it combats lines and wrinkles, roughness and redness.

It is the cream type of handmask, therefore, more easily applied and removed and does not have a drying effect. Neither does it leave the hands greasy and sticky.

You'll love its spicy odor—and, incidentally, this comes from the actual ingredients and not from an added perfume. And you'll be thrilled with its immediate results.

A jar of the mask costs only $1 and represents a most advantageous investment.

Dress for Young Girls Will Serve Many Purposes

Pattern No. 612.

CONFIRMATION, graduation, first dancing class—these are just three of the big moments that come into a young girl's life during the spring. Why not make one simple but pretty white dress for her that will serve for all of these occasions?

This pattern is really easy enough for a teen-age girl to make for herself, if she sews at all. The large instruction chart will help her over the troubling details. Dotted swiss would be a charming fabric, with ribbon or self-fabric sash. The design is cut in sizes 8 to 14. The long-length frock, size 10, requires 3½ yards of 35-inch fabric and 1⅛ yards for sash, or separate ribbon.

How to Keep Well

By Dr. Irving S. Cutter.

A Dangerous Antiseptic.

WHILE there are many "do's" in medicine, there also are many "don't." One of the latter concerns the danger of phenol (carbolic acid) as a dressing for wounds. Although numerous warnings have been issued from time to time against applying carbolic acid to skin surfaces, its use continues, and all too frequently with disastrous results. In some households carbolic acid is still used as a "first aid" in cuts and wounds, despite the fact that so many relatively harmless substances are now available that will destroy bacteria. Its presence in the home medicince chest is to be condemned.

Serious damage, of which the public is all too ignorant, may attend its use. When applied as a dressing to a wounded finger or toe there may follow a destruction of blood vessels that cuts off circulation and results in gangrene. A most striking effect is sometimes noted when a bit of gauze soaked in carbolic acid is wrapped around a finger and allowed to remain in that situation for some hours; even a very dilute solution, if left in contact with the skin for many hours, may bring about blood vessel blocking. Occasionally gangrene has resulted from the continued application of carbolized vaseline, and there are many mixtures containing carbolic acid that are equally harmful. One of these contains camphor.

The first effect of phenol is that it produces a local anesthesia (loss of sensation), hence the patient may not be aware of the tissue changes that are taking place. The skin at first appears wrinkled and grayish white. As the action continues the skin becomes darker and more shriveled, and if the acid is not completely removed the parts may become entirely black. This usually means that the capillaries have been entirely destroyed and no restoration of circulation is possible.

While carbolic acid is a strong antiseptic, it is not as powerful in this respect as is generally believed. There are many antiseptics of greater value, such as Dakin's solution (chlorine) and tincture of iodine. Furthermore, dressings that are kept moist and hot may need no antiseptic at all, or, at best, but a mild solution of boric acid.

We owe to carbolic acid the beginnings of modern surgery. It was this particular substance that Joseph Lister employed (as a spray) to kill the bacteria on the skin of the patient, the operator's hands, and the surgical instruments.

Carbolic acid (which is chemically not an acid at all but an alcohol) has many uses, but if any other antiseptic is available do not employ it on skin or wounded areas, at least for any length of time. Its burning effect may be neutralized by moistening the parts with grain alcohol.

Child Chats

By Alice Fox Pitts.

WHEN little children write on walls they are not impelled to do so by mischievous intent. It is simply a matter of convenience. The wall is an invitation to scribble with pencil or crayons.

The best way to handle the situation is not to scold but to provide an equally convenient place for the child to write, without disastrous results.

A large blackboard, with chalk handy, solves the problem: Hang it low enough for the small child to write on easily. Or a large pad of paper, hung on the wall, will serve equally well, if a supply of crayons is kept close at hand, too. An easel, with a rack for poster paints, takes more space, but offers a fine outlet for artistic effort. Or if you can avail yourself of none of these, keep a goodly supply of scrap paper and black pencils at hand. When a child has an equally satisfying place to scribble, he won't think of writing on the walls.

THREE MEN AND DIANA

By KATHLEEN NORRIS

Diana Carmichael's grandmother kept a boarding house down where the town trailed out into empty lots and railway fences. Diana suffered at being poor. She could not dress as the other girls dressed. She longed, too, to go to college. The ambition was so strong, that Diana had no thought left for boys. But then she met Bruce Palmer, and fell in love with him. After finishing high school, she went to work in a hardware store, since she could not afford college. For a while Bruce was in the store, too, as the store belonged to his family. When Bruce went away Diana was lonelier than ever.

DIANA'S grandmother was placing the neat little rolls of dough in a buttered baking pan to rise. Her old fingers worked expertly; she presently used two fingertips to butter the tops of the little white lumps.

"Peter's coming to dinner, Di."

"Peter is?"

"He phoned. Seems Phil wants to go somewhere tonight, and Peter said he'd take the late shift."

"Three then." But Diana made no move to clear or set the table. Plenty of time. The vociferous alarm clock on the sink shelf said seven minutes to six; the pudding would not be done until quarter to seven.

"Quiet in the store today?"

"Dead." Diana remembered suddenly the officiousness of Mr. Morey, and her eyes narrowed. But it was not until Peter had come in, spattered and breathless, that she mentioned the matter.

Then, when the three were enjoying the pot roast, the beets, the fluffy rolls, she said idly:

He Loved Politics.

"You should have heard little sneezy Morey today."

Peter looked at her expectantly. He was wolfing his food, for before he took the nine o'clock shift he intended to go to a political meeting downtown. Peter was public-spirited, not to say socialistic, in his tendencies, and never missed an opportunity to listen to fiery campaign arguments or, indeed, if encouraged, to leap to his feet in public denunciation or defense of them.

"What'd Morey say?"

"Oh, he said he was disappointed in me, and that was not showing the true cooperative spirit that made the Bayhead Hardstore Store unlike any other on the Peninsula, and so on!"

Di spoke on the tone of a yawn, shrugged.

"Ha!" Peter ejaculated, interested. "What joo say?"

"I looked at my nails."

"What's this meeting tonight, Peter?"

"For Rocket. We're trying to get Torrey out. He's a crook. Why don't you come, Di? It's keen; you'd love it."

The Actor Arrived.

"Not in this rain!" Diana took small interest in public affairs. She sighed, rested her elbows on the table; wondered what Joan and Patsy were doing. The storm rattled the windows.

Peter attacked his pudding enthusiastically. A young man, with a handsome face and dark curly hair dashed with rain, opened the door from the inner hall and smiled into the kitchen.

"I rang twice, and then, as the door was open, I walked in!"

"Well, for mercy's sake, Mr.—Mr. Tressady!" Gram stammered, flustered.

Neal Tressady. He came in, was introduced, and drew up a chair to the table. He shook back his hair and sent his engaging, eager glance from face to face.

"I was sort of afraid you'd be at dinner, but I couldn't come any other time."

He and Diana looked at each other, and she saw in his eyes that odd kindling and darkening that she had seen in other men's eyes in the first minute of meeting.

A Charming Person.

She was a woman, beautiful and 20, with slim hands and ivory skin, with her fair hair pressed by her own fingers into a cap of ripples and waves about her proud young head, her heavy eyelashes only half raised, and her mouth puckered into only half a smile, as she watched him.

Peter faded from the scene, bent upon his patriotic errand; Gram went to answer a telephone; Diana and Neal were left alone.

They sat on at the disordered table, talking. He had declined pudding, but was enjoying tea and rolls. He told her almost immediately that his real name was George Neal, but that he had taken one of the names in his mother's family upon becoming an actor.

He had acted in a great many plays, and knew a great many players. Some of the famous folk of Hollywood were "Nancy" and "Joan," "Ben" and "Wally" to him. He had been many places—born in Turkey 29 years ago, his father, a consul, had dragged him and his mother from one place to another all through his childhood.

Parents Lived Apart.

"Bess got tired of it. Bess is my mother. She's the most wonderful woman alive. I'm crazy about my mother!"

"I'm hoping to meet her."

"That's right, you didn't meet her. She's terribly cute. I call her 'Bess' or 'Cherie.' I've never called her 'Mother.' She was only 19 when I was born—she doesn't weigh a hundred pounds."

He told her that his mother had been living apart from his father since he himself had been 12 years old. He and she were chums, and all his friends adored Bess, or Cherie. She often was taken for his sister.

"Kate Witherspoon's a great friend of hers, they're crazy about each other. I've always called her 'Aunt Kate,' see? She lived with us in Culver City, and she came up here two years ago and opened the Virginia. She's made a great go of it, see? So now she wants my mother to be with her and open one of those giftie shoppies, see?"

Helped With Dishes.

He was so eager, so friendly and confidential and entertaining that Diana was immediately transported into her most sparkling mood. Her blue eyes danced with mischief and amusement as she talked to him, or rather listened, and led him to talk.

When her grandmother came back and began to clear the table, Neal jumped up and lent her expert assistance. He asked for an apron, and Diana laughed as she tied it about his bigness. He was something more than 6 feet in height, 3 inches at least taller than Peter, and had an athlete's slim-waisted, broad-shouldered figure.

"Bess and I used to do all our own work," he explained, wiping dishes rapidly. "We had a top floor in an old building on Washington Square South, New York—you know New York?"

"Not yet!" Diana said, but in a tone that indicated that New York and adventure were only around the corner.

"Well, we had a great little place there. And all the crowd would come in Sunday afternoons, and Cherie'd send 'em after rye bread and Swiss cheese——"

It sounded such fun! This crazy boy was probably drawing a pretty long bow half the time, but what fun he was, with his quick, animated speech, and his illustrative gestures, like a stage Frenchman—and his "despising" this, and "all but going off into a coma" at that!

"I was so mad about this Russian woman, mind you, that I wanted to kill myself!"

"But you said her son was your age?"

"Vanni. He was."

"Then you were simply crazy."

"But I tell you I'm crazy. Anyway," Neal said to Mrs. Chamberlain, "I've got her jealous, haven't I?"

He made them laugh again, when, having finished the dishes and the swabbing of the sink, and the disposal of the last crumb, he asked in a business-like way, "Here, haven't we any Koralax? Can't get old sinkboards clean without Koralax!"

Grandma Protested.

Afterward he said, "I parked in the street. Have you got an old hat that the rain couldn't hurt? Let's boom somewhere."

"This child's much too tired to go out," Gram protested, alarmed.

"Listen, Mrs. Chamberlain, here's all we'll do. We'll take a look at the movies, here and in Redwood City, and if we don't like 'em we'll go over to Chloe's and have a sandwich. How's that?"

"How do you know about Chloe's?" Diana asked.

"I went to Lucas College, you know, for half a year."

"You did!"

"Sure. Six years ago. I lived at the fraternity house."

"You did? And where was your mother?"

"She was with Aunt Kate in Culver City. My mother, you know, married again about seven years ago. I think she did it to give me a home. But it didn't——" said Neal, with his brilliant smile, "it didn't—take. She beat it after a year. But meanwhile I'd held the old boy up for my first year in college. Go get your hat and coat!"

Diana, excited, happy, forgetting all her woes, flew to obey.

'Waterskin' Is Used For Newest Raincoats

Experimenting Best Way To Perfect Cocktail Sauce

Most Satisfactory Plan Is to Put in Ingredients to Suit Individual Taste; Sample Recipe Is Suggested.

By Dorothea Duncan.

JUST WHAT does constitute a good seafood cocktail sauce? This question, submitted by one of our readers, will cause controversy, for almost everyone has a different conception of what a good cocktail sauce should be. Take the chef at your favorite dining place. His cocktail sauce may be the only one in the city that suits your taste completely. Don't try to pry the recipe out of him, however, for to a chef each recipe is his own creation and must remain a secret formula. How else could he preserve his art?

The best you can do, if you already have a definite idea about how cocktail sauce should taste, is to experiment with the general cocktail sauce ingredients. Work with them, adding a bit of this and a dash of that until you, too, have your secret formula perfected, and when you arrive at this stage, don't forget to write down the amount of each ingredient used, lest this important detail escape you.

Chili sauce, ketchup, horseradish, lemon, salt, onion juice, tobasco, and Worcestershire sauce are the ingredients that are usually employed in producing a good seafood cocktail sauce. This doesn't mean that all these things necessarily need be incorporated into the one sauce. It is all a matter of personal taste. For example, a sauce is often served with a seafood cocktail, and with this horseradish and Worcestershire sauce are served to be added according to personal taste.

Recipe for Sauce.

The following recipe for a cocktail sauce may appeal to you just as it is here, but if not, try a little experimenting of your own.

Cocktail Sauce.

2 tablespoons prepared horseradish
3 tablespoons chili sauce
¾ cup ketchup
2 tablespoons lemon juice
Dash of salt.

Combine ingredients and blend. Chill thoroughly. Serve with oyster or clam cocktail, or with cooked fish. Makes 1 cup of sauce.

Other questions follow.

Question—Is drawn butter merely melted butter? If not, will you please publish a recipe for it.

Answer—Drawn butter is a type of sauce. The recipe follows.

Drawn Butter Sauce.

1-3 cup butter
4 tablespoons flour
1 pint boiling water
¾ teaspoon salt

Make a paste of four tablespoons of the butter and all of the flour. (Melt the butter and stir in the flour gradually, taking care that there be no lumps). Gradually add the boiling water, stirring constantly over hot water, until the sauce comes to the boiling point. Simmer until it is thick and smooth. When ready to serve, add salt and remaining butter in small pieces, beating constantly.

Advice on Shortening.

Question—So many of my recipes, which include shortening, seem to be too rich. Do you suppose that I have been measuring my shortening incorrectly?

Answer—If you have been using tested recipes, this may be the fault. Try measuring fat by means of water. For instance, to measure one-third cup of solid shortening, fill a standard measuring cup two-thirds full of cold water, then drop in pieces of the shortening, pushing them under the water until the water level reaches the one cupful mark. If one-half cup of shortening is called for in the recipe, fill the cup one-half full of water and so on for any quantity desired.

Another accurate method, especially recommended for small quantities, is to pack the shortening into a standard measuring spoon and level off evenly with the straight edge of a knife.

Question—Do you have a recipe for braised leg of lamb?

Braised Leg of Lamb.

1 leg of lamb (about 6 pounds)
Cracker crumb stuffing
½ onion
1 carrot
1 turnip
½ bay leaf
1 sprig each thyme and parsley
¼ cup drippings
3 cups hot water
1½ teaspoons salt
12 peppercorns

Have the leg of lamb boned. Wipe, stuff with cracker crumbs stuffing, sew and place in a deep pan. Cook the sliced onion, the diced carrot and turnip, bay leaf, thyme and parsley in the drippings a few minutes. Add the hot water, salt and peppercorns and pour mixture over the meat. Cook in the oven at a moderate temperature (350 degrees F.) for two hours, with the dish covered. Then remove the cover and cook for 30 minutes. Make a brown gravy out of the strained broth in which the meat has been cooked.

Homemaker or Career? Both, Is Reply Of Mrs. Pyke, Ohio Customs Collector

Underwood & Underwood.

She looks utterly feminine, doesn't she? Well, she is, but for years Mrs. Bernice Pyke—that's the lady's name—has been doing a man's work in addition to making a pleasant home for her husband and son. She believes it is possible for a woman to do two jobs and do both of them well.

Proves Theory Woman Can Hold 2 Jobs and Do Justice to Each.

By Virginia Lee Warren.

THE PERENNIAL argument over domesticity versus careers for women has been settled by Mrs. Bernice Pyke, of Cleveland. In fact it's hard for Mrs. Pyke to realize such an argument still exists. She has always believed a woman can hold down two jobs at once and do both of them well. For a good many years she has been proving her theory.

The turbulent activity of those years includes working for woman's suffrage, campaigning for Judge Florence Allen, serving the Democratic Party as national committeewoman in Ohio, serving the city of Cleveland as welfare director and member of the mayor's cabinet, holding the job of United States collector of customs for Ohio, and making a home for her husband and son.

Mr. Pyke, she wants it understood, is a successful business man.

"Nowadays when a wife has a good job everybody takes it for granted her husband is down and out," Mrs. Pyke laughed yesterday. "Well, mine isn't. He's as busy as I am."

U. S. Customs Collector.

Mrs. Pyke's present job is collecting United States customs for Ohio. When she received her appointment from President Roosevelt a little less than a year ago she became one of four women engaged in the work.

She was the first woman in the United States to be elected a delegate to the national convention of either party. However, by the time the Democrats convened in June, 1920, a few women had been elected in Western States, where the suffrage amendment had already been adopted. Mrs. Pyke's own election took place in April.

It was in that same year that a young attorney by the name of Florence Allen ran for her first judgeship. She and Mrs. Pyke had already fought side by side in the suffrage battle. Mrs. Pyke took an active part in Florence Allen's first campaign. She has thrown her support to all the subsequent ones.

Although she said yesterday she believes Judge Allen is capable of filling any postion given her, Mrs. Pyke doesn't think the Ohio jurist stands a chance of receiving the Vice Presidential nomination in 1936, although a league has been formed for that purpose.

"Women are not strong enough in their political parties to demand the nomination," she explained. "Personally, I believe every woman who is interested in politics and public affairs should work within a party organization. I don't see how she can hope to accomplish anything otherwise."

Finds Women Good Executives.

"Women are in Government to stay," Mrs. Pyke declared. "President Roosevelt has set a precedent by appointing them to posts which range from the Cabinet to the Mint. Now that the precedent has been set you may be sure women will see that it is followed in years to come."

And that's a good thing in the opinion of Mrs. Pyke. She believes women make as good executives and workmen as men. She ought to know. When she was welfare director of Cleveland she had 2,500 persons, men and women, working under her supervision. As collector of customs, she directs a staff of about 80. She has found women no harder—an incidentally no easier—to manage than men.

"They're both human beings," she smiled. "What's more, I've learned that as many men as women try to smuggle things past customs. We always hear about women trying to slip in jewels and fur coats. It just happens we don't hear so much about the men who try to evade customs. I suppose they don't make as good newspaper copy as the women."

Mrs. Pyke gave a little pat to the modish black toque atop her fluffy white hair and got up to go to the Senate gallery. She rushed from one place to another during her few days in Washington; had a conference with Mrs. Roosevelt, attended a musicale at the White House, conferred with Senators and Representatives on the Hill. And now, she was on her way to listen in on a session of the Senate.

But as she started toward the gallery she turned back to her interviewer and said:

"Oh, you haven't asked me about my son. Wouldn't you like to know about him?"

It developed young John Pyke is an attorney in Cleveland, is married and has a home of his own, and—probably most important of all to his mother—has a passion for politics.

CULBERTSON on BRIDGE

Grand National Bridge Tournament.

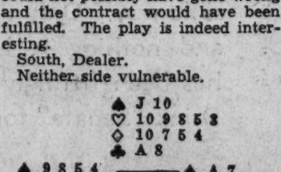
It is safe to say that the Grand National contract bridge championships held in New York recently were without parallel in the annals of bridge history. In the first place there were more than 40 players who journeyed great distances to play in them. The attendance was not notable in numbers but shone luminously in bright lights. Nearly all the great masters were present and the near great made up the rest of the field.

All seemed to enjoy themselves and the United States Bridge Association, under whose auspices the tourney took place, proved itself a perfect host.

A Foolish Risk.

On the hand below West went down on a game contract by misguessing the club finesse. Had South defended normally and shown all his high cards, West could not possibly have gone wrong and the contract would have been fulfilled. The play is indeed interesting.

South, Dealer.
Neither side vulnerable.



The bidding: (Figures after bids refer to numbered explanatory paragraphs.)

South	West	North	East
Pass	Pass	Pass	1♣
Pass	1♠	Pass	1NT
Pass	3♠ (1)	Pass	3NT
Pass

1—An unusual bid but West, after his partner has opened the bidding fourth hand and rebid, must take some strong action. He assumes there is some sort of spade fit on East's notrump bid and consequently makes a jump rebid in that suit, despite its lack of honors.

2—West, having made a semiforcing bid in spades on such a weak suit can not afford to let his partner play the hand in notrump as he realizes the opponents will probably set up their suit before the spades can be established.

The Play.

North opened the heart ten, dummy playing low and South signalling. Declarer won with the Ace. He led a low spade to the Ace and continued with the suit. South winning with the Queen. South then played the heart King, which declarer ruffed.

West left the high trump outstanding and ran his diamonds. The King and Queen in dummy won the first two rounds of the suit, and when a low one was continued, South did not trump in. Declarer won with the Ace and continued with the Jack, South ruffed. Obviously, to South the only hope of defeating the contract lay in winning two club tricks should declarer misguess the suit.

South, therefore, deliberately existed with a low heart rather than the Queen. Declarer did not know he could discard as North's original opening lead might have been made from the Queen-ten-nine. West did not suspect South was risking a discard when he could lay down the high card of the suit. West trumped and then had to lead a club. North, of course, ducked and West had nothing to go by. It was a pure guess and since South made such a beautiful play, I am glad to be able to report that West guessed incorrectly. He played the Jack, and South won with the Queen and returned a club for the setting trick.

Beauty Ritual Before Retiring Demanded by Good Grooming

BEDTIME beauty rituals are regarded by most women as nuisances and bores. But according to beauty specialists they are highly requisite to good grooming.

Take, for instance, that finger-wave or marcel. How does it look in the mornings? Towsled, straggly and unkempt. Your money gone for nothing! But, with the aid of a hairnet which you can adjust in a few minutes the night before, your waves will be smooth, and even, and likely to last a week or more.

Of course, if you come home late, tired and sleepy, it isn't a pleasant prospect to think you must spend 15 or 20 minutes making this bedtime toilette. But if you turn this beauty ritual into a habit it will become a matter of course and won't take more than five or ten minutes at the most.

Keep your hair net on your dressing table where you can slip it over your head as soon as you've brushed your hair.

Nearby have a jar of cleansing cream and some soft tissues. Rub the cream over your face and neck. —don't neglect your neck—and then wipe it off with your tissue. This takes but a few seconds. Now, if you're bothered with lines or a dry, sensitive skin, reach for your rich, nourishing cream and smooth this on. Pat it in briskly and then wipe off the surplus.

Nothing is more injurious to the skin than retiring with a face caked with rouge and powder. Unless you are careful to remove them they will cause enlarged pores, blackheads and unsightly blemishes. The skin becomes coarse and muddy-looking. Remember it will require a much longer time to restore it to a normal smoothness and fairness than to take this ounce of prevention.

Next, your hands. Close by your stationary washstand you should keep a bottle of hand lotion or cream, whichever you prefer. Immediately after washing the hands, apply one of these. And if you want to be particularly careful, don an old pair of gloves.

Can Big, Strong, Independent Girl Get Away With "Little Woman" Role?

By Mary Haworth.

DEAR MISS HAWORTH: I am a strong, exuberant, healthy member of the so-called "gentle sex" and as such find it hard to pretend I am one of those clinging vines who are the petted darlings of men.

• • • •

Only the other day I got "bawled out" by a gentleman (?) friend because I playfully leaped ahead of him to open a taxicab door and get in out of the rain. He said I displayed all the more unfortunate characteristics of an independent woman and that as a simple matter of fetching-up, I should know better than to do lackey service to an able-bodied man.

• • • •

We both laughed, of course, but the remark stung. I am an orphan child, but hardly a child, being now past 30. I nursed a father and mother through their last illnesses, am putting a young nephew through school, and live quite well on an income derived entirely from my own efforts.

• • • •

I don't know how not to wait on myself and to anticipate the needs of others has become second-nature to me, after nearly 15 years' practice in the art. I have always thought the essence of personal charm, if any, was "being yourself," and I fear I would be just about as convincing as the wolf dressed up in grandma's night clothes if I resorted to eye-rolling, hand-wringing, "O-you-great-big-wonderfulman" tactics in order to be "womanly."

• • • •

I'm 5 feet 6 inches tall, husky as an athlete and a mouse would be hard put to it in an encounter with me. But I candidly confess nothing in this world would make me happier than to have some six-foot man call me "baby" and mean it.

• • • •

Can my type of femininity get away with the little-woman act, or am I condemned forever to play the wholesome, back-slapping role, laughing with tears in my throat while some man treats me like a half-wit younger brother? Answer my question, please, and oblige.

CAN'T-TAKE-IT.

It's Second Nature.

DEAR CAN'T-TAKE-IT: You can blame your perfectly delightful sense of humor if, up to now, no man has called you "baby" and meant it. You might long since have had your heart's desire if you didn't hold your suitors at arm's length by the shield of your contagious laughter.

• • • •

That scolding your man friend administered following the incident of the taxicab was pitched to the key of your facetiousness. His rebuke stung you, yes, and you concealed the fact with laugher; even as he concealed his hurt pride at being made to feel clumsy, heavy-footed and unnecessary, as you sprang unassisted into the taxicab.

• • • •

Being one's self is highly important in giving free play to whatever intrinsic charm one possesses, but—are you sure you are always yourself? If you want to be cherished and protected by men, why hurt your throat with the contradictory effort of playing the role of insouciant, half-wit younger brother? I think I know. I think the answer is: self-consciousness.

• • • •

Forced into a role of self-sufficiency years ago, into being a rock of Gibralter for helpless others, you are chagrined and self conscious over the discovery you are just one more woman feeling the age-old feminine urge to creep into the protective curve of some man's arm. You can't easily find your way back into the role of being just yourself.

• • • •

So, just like any actress learning her part, you'll have to study and practice it until it's enactment becomes second nature. By all means play the "little woman" act, with a dash of ingenue or prima donna or femme fatale, or whatever type appeals to you as best suited to your gifts of temperament.

• • • •

Let men open doors for you, and pay checks, and summon taxies. Turn upon them a hurt and tearful and eloquent eye when they've crushed your heart with a careless word. Stop slapping their backs. Do a little restrained hand-wringing now and then. In other words, "Can't Take-It," be yourself.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

New Effort to Discredit Frances Willard Fails

Regret for Drinking Wine on Few Occasions at Physician's Advice Voiced by Reform Leader in Memoirs.

THE DEBUNKERS are after Frances Willard again. A few years ago they declared the great temperance reform leader, who died 37 years ago, had actually smoked cigarettes. No sooner was the charge made than the W. C. T. U. which Miss Willard served as president for many terms, rushed to her rescue and proved the allegation false.

Now a new controversy is on. This time it concerns the charge by debunkers that, while Miss Willard was a vehement advocate of total abstinence, she herself sometimes indulged in wine. To silence critics the W. C. T. U. has again come forward with evidence which, while failing to prove the charges entirely unfounded, at least explains why she yielded to the temptation of the glass on a few occasions.

The evidence consists of excerpts from Miss Willard's memoirs, "Glimpses of Fifty Years," which refer to her two-year sojourn in Europe at least a decade before she became president of the W. C. T. U. While she was abroad she did drink wine. Her experience is described in her own words as follows:

"Three things I did once in a while during my two years and four months of foreign travel that I never did and never do at home. I went to see sights on Sunday, went to the theater, and took wine at dinner. I reflect upon these facts with undisguised regret, but will frankly mention how this apostasy occurred. • • • Having been reared a total abstainer the thought never occurred to me to take wine until my violent illness in Copenhagen when a kind-faced physician bent over me and told me in French that if I ever expected to see my home again I must avoid drinking water as we journeyed from one country to another, that being the most fruitful source of disease among travelers."

But when Miss Willard returned to the United States and meditated she wished she had risked the dangers involved in sticking to water. Her own words concerning drinking wine at dinner were:

"Coming home, the custom was at once abandoned. • • • I firmly believed that had I never tasted wine on the other side of the water and had I scrupulously followed the American customs in my Sabbath observance, it would have been much better for me in every way."

The debunkers, in making their charge, used the same excerpts from Miss Willard's memoirs, but, according to the W. C. T. U., they omitted the most important sentence—"I reflect upon these facts with undisguised regret, but will frankly mention how this apostasy occurred."

What TODAY Means

Pisces."

IF MARCH 12 is your birthday, the best hours for you this date are from 9:45 to 11:45 a. m., from 1:45 to 3:45 p. m. and from 7:45 to 9:45 p. m. The danger periods are from 6:45 to 8:45 a. m., from 3:45 to 5:45 p. m. and from 10:45 until midnight.

Do not let anything discourage you on this date. The wheel of fate spins with marvelous speed, and there is a strong probability that at the present time it is weaving a bunch of good fortune for you. Plucky determination is all that is needed to surmount most difficulties. The trend of business will in all likelihood be opitmistic, and results should reflect this feeling. Any tendency to inflate values may prove poor judgment, so it might be advisable to be conservative.

If a woman, and March 12 is your birthday, the quicker you learn that there are, usually, "two sides to every story," and that people do not, as a rule, deliberately ignore their social or financial obligations, the happier life will become for you.

The child born on March 12, generally when it reaches its teens displays an unusual amount of poise. Usually its parents are very gratified by numerous complimentary comments made regarding its self-possession and conversational ability.

If a man, and March 12 is your natal day, you will have an easy road to success if you will literally "do unto others as you would have them do unto you." Mechanical engineering, manufacturing, medicine, law, as well as some specialized line of writing, may offer the opportunity for realizing satisfactory results.

Arrest Brings Sultan's Order For Tax Audit

False Pretenses Charged to Trusted Employe of Assessor's Office.

Following arrest yesterday of a trusted employe of the District tax assessor's office after an alleged attempt to extort money, Engineer Commissioner Dan I. Sultan last night ordered a complete audit of the tax books.

The audit, the Commissioner said, was prompted by a desire to determine if the alleged practice was widespread.

The employe taken into custody and later released under $300 bond is Alfred J. Moss, colored, 55, in charge of deeds and property records at the tax office. He was formally charged with obtaining money under false pretenses, following a complaint by R. C. Tilghman, of Benning, D. C.

Tilghman said he went to the tax office to inquire about delinquent taxes on property owned by his wife. He said Moss told him there would be a 6 per cent interest on back taxes, due since 1927. Then, Tilghman reported, Moss declared the interest could be deducted if it was worth his while." According to police, the tax clerk suggested a $15 "gift."

Yesterday, when Tilghman returned to the office, he took with him Detective Sergts. Elmer Lewis, J. J. Tolson and District Building officials. Tilghman allegedly gave Moss $15 in marked money. The bills allegedly were found in Moss' possession and he was arrested. He has been a District employe for 36 years.

DEMANDS are made by the Washington Chapter of the Federation of Architects, Chemists and Technicians for "payment of full union rates on all projects carried out with Government funds."

The demands are reported made in a telegram sent to the White House, chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee and to Senator McCarran, as follows:

"As an organization of technical and professional men, the vast majority of whom are to be directly affected by the work relief bill now pending in the Senate, we absolutely oppose the $50 per month provision as utterly inadequate as a living wage and as certain to cut the wages of those now employed. We demand that provision be made for payment of full union rates on all projects carried out with Government funds. The return of prosperity can be accomplished only by raising living standards, not by cutting them."

What is one man's meat is another man's poison—but what is every man's poison is a staple item in the diet of the hardy "drug-store beetle." This beetle, which is a curiosity to scientists and a pest to shopkeepers, will eat at least 45 different drugs and a wide assortment of other articles.

Aconite, belladonna and ergot, all poisonous to man, are eaten with impunity by the drug-store beetle. It even eats insect powders which are strong enough to kill any other insect. Opium and red pepper are other items seemingly relished by it.

Sir Francis Drake had already made a name for himself as an English hero decorated by the queen herself for his circumnavigation of the earth and, incidentally, for his successful free-lance warring on Spanish commercial shipping, before he took part in the great defeat of the Spanish Armada—a battle which changed the course of world history.

It was Drake who captured the flagship of the Spanish fleet, without a struggle, some say, because the commander gave up when he learned that Drake was his adversary. Drake was the outstanding hero of the battle—but he was not the commander. He did not get there until a week after the battle started. Lord Howard, English admiral in command, fought the Spanish off from July 30 to August 8, when Drake and his forces joined him in the battle. A terrific storm at sea finished the job of destroying the Spanish fleet.

Free State's Relief Bill Is Expedited

Action Is Necessary by Thursday to Get Federal Aid.

Budget Fight on Floor Looms When Report Is Received.

Annapolis, Md., March 11 (AP).—The adoption of a State relief policy to insure continued participation in Federal funds was a vital subject before the Legislature when the members reassembled tonight for the eleventh week of the session.

The Federal Government has supplied the funds to meet the State's relief needs until Thursday, with the warning that unless revenue-producing measures are agreed upon by that time, no further Federal funds will be forthcoming.

Sub-committees of the House and Senate, which have investigated the general relief situation, have recommended that the State raise no less than $2,000,000 annually and can not raise more than $4,000,000. They suggested a number of small taxes rather than a large tax on a single revenue source.

Budget Measure Pends.

Committees representing the House and Senate met with Gov. Harry W. Nice Saturday afternoon to draw up a policy, and held another session today just before the Legislature convened.

Another important measure awaiting action by the House of Delegates is the Governor's budget for 1936-37. This measure has been passed by the Senate and is in the House ways and means committee. It is understood that a group in the committee wishes it reported to the House without further cuts, but that another group desires to lop off at least the $50,000 allowed for a survey of State departments, allowed by the Senate, and $35,000 allowed for remodeling the executive mansion and other items.

From indications it appears that the group which favors leaving the budget intact may prove the strongest. In this event a fight on the floor is expected when the budget is reported out tonight or tomorrow.

Banking Report Forwarded.

The Governor sent to the Legislature the report of his committees on parole and banking, with legislation recommended by the groups. He said he had asked the banking committee, headed by Albert Graham, to submit a list of names from which he can select the State bank commissioner.

The necessity of passing the $8,500,000 State bond issue bill, which will take care of the State's anticipated deficit and supply working capital, was stressed today, when it was found that the State ended February $832,325.12 in the red. This deficit in operating revenues occurred despite the $1,000,000 recently borrowed by the State treasurer against outstanding taxes.

Mayor Howard W. Jackson, City Solicitor G. Lee Marshall, Herbert Fallon and Philip Perlman held a conference with the Governor over $91,000 annually which the city lost by budget cuts and fund transfers.

Iceboat Annapolis Item.

The mayor said that the city needed $3,000 more than the budget allowance to operate the iceboat Annapolis, and that the Governor had agreed to take this item up with the board of public works.

By a transfer of motor vehicle funds in the budget, the mayor pointed out, the city lost $88,000 annually, its share of 30 per cent of the $295,000 devoted to other purposes. He said the Governor stated he thought this item could be cared for if the bond issue measures now pending before the Legislature are passed.

After the conference, the mayor said he was "satisfied" and that he thought the city would get the money requested "sooner or later."

Bill Asks Tax Payments Quarterly in Carroll

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Westminster, Md., March 11.—A Senate bill to provide for quarterly payment of taxes in Carroll County will be introduced by State Senator J. David Baile, according to a statement made by the senator yesterday.

The proposed legislation includes provisions for mailing tax bills four times each year, with interest due after 90 days. The aim of the bill, according to Senator Baile, is to facilitate collection.

Senator Baile asserted that when wheat formed a major source of income for the farmers in the county, the system of mailing one tax bill each year proved satisfactory, but under present conditions, with farmers deriving their income throughout the year from milk checks and marketing various crops, quarterly payments seem to be the best method of effecting collection.

In addition to the proposed county measure, Senator Baile has introduced a State-wide Senate bill designed to permit any county, by resolution of the county commissioners, to collect county and State taxes on any plan they wished to adopt.

Clifton Forge Girls' Slayer Is Electrocuted

Jones, 'Calm,' Dies in Chair at Virginia State Penitentiary.

By the Associated Press.

Richmond, Va., March 11.—Philip Jones, colored, died in the electric chair at the Virginia State Feitentiary this morning for the murder of two little white girls at Clifton Forge, Va., last November Jones died at 8:05 a. m.

He was convicted of battering to death Alice Hill, 11, of Clifton Forge, with a shotgun butt after he had attempted to assault her criminally. Sentenced to die for the murder of Alice, he never went to trial for murdering Alice's younger sister, Ellen, 9, in the same manner.

Prisoner Calm.

Major Rice Youell, superintendent of the Virginia Penitentiary, said that he did not witness the execution, but understood that Jones went to his death "about like all the others do." Saying he "got religion" while waiting in the death cell last week, the giant prisoner awaited the end with considerable calm. He partook of regular prison fare last night and ate breakfast today.

Jones had a Virginia prison record of two previous sentences. He was committed to the Virginia Penitentiary here in 1930 from Buckingham County upon conviction for "maiming" another person, and served one year for this crime. In 1932, Maj. Youell said, he worked out a six-month sentence on a misdemeanor charge on a road camp chain-gang near Lovingston in Nelson County.

Sentence of death by Judge Benjamin T. Haden in the Botetourt Circuit Court last January 5 claimed for the State the life of the Negro, which had been sought by an irate mob the night the bodies of the girls were found.

Moved Across State.

So hot on the Negro's trail was the mob, offcers hurried him and his companions arrested with him to the jail in Roanoke and then to the Henrico County jail across the State. So tense was the feeling in Clifton Forge the trial was moved to another county, Botetourt.

Authorities, fearful for Jones' safety during the trial, locked the courtroom to all except court officers and newspaper men and summoned State police, who stood guard during the entire trial, armed with riot sticks, machine guns and gas.

Widow of President May Witness Dedication.

By the Associated Press.

Rockefeller, jr. More than $8,000 has been spent on the restoration of the exterior of the building. The Surry branch of the organization hopes to raise more money to continue the restoration, Mrs. Johns said.

Senate Asks Banks Board In Maryland

Commission of 3 Urged in Bills Offered by Republican.

'Non-Political' Counsel Promised in Plan by Commission.

By the Associated Press.

Annapolis, Md., March 11.—The creation of an unpaid banking board to function as a consulting directorate to the State bank commissioner would be provided by a group of measures introduced in the Senate tonight, designed to strengthen the banking structure of the State.

The bills, drawn up by the Governor's banking commission, were presented by Senator J. David Baile (Republican), Carroll. The report of the commission to the Governor was sent by him to the Legislature.

It was provided that the banking board, to be appointed by the Governor, should consist of three men, one representing the Baltimore Clearing House, another the associated mutual savings banks of Baltimore, and the third the Maryland State Bankers Association. These organizations would each submit lists of three men qualified and from these the Governor would make his selections.

Pay Raise Asked.

The board would confer with the bank commissioner when he deemed it necessary and when he required guidance from "impartial counsellors whose advice will not be colored by political or personal considerations."

The commission sponsored a bill designed to raise the salary of the bank commissioner from $10,000 to $12,500 annually, and increase his term of office to six years. The salary of the deputy bank commissioner would be increased from $6,000 to $7,500 annually. At the same time the commission sponsored legislation designed to make the banking department practically self-sustaining.

This is accomplished by providing for an increase in fees charged for making bank examinations bringing them to the level of the fees charged by Federal authorities in connection with the examinations of National banks.

$100 Charge Proposed.

A charge of $100 would be made for each examination, to which would be added—after first deducting $25,000 from the total assets of the institution examined—3 cents per $1,000 for remaining total assets. Licenses would be issued under the small loan act at a revised rate.

The commission consists of A. D. Graham, chairman; A. C. Levering, James D. Garrett, F. L. Thomas, Warren F. Sterling, William S. Hill, L. Wethered Barroll, Charles Ruzicka, L. S. Zimmerman, Levi B. Phillips, J. Purdon Wright and Jacob France.

Mayor of Suffolk Mistaken In N. Y. for 'Genial Jim' Farley

Otis A. Smith Introduced as Postmaster General at Theater Grill, But Says Folk Should Have Recognized Error.

By the Associated Press.

Suffolk, Va., March 11.—Introduction in a New York theater grill as Postmaster General James A. Farley came as no surprise to Mayor Otis S. Smith, of Suffolk, Va., since is inured by now to being mistaken for the Cabinet officer.

His resemblance to the big and genial dispenser of the Democratic Party's patronage is so strong that he often is hailed in hotel lobbies with a "hello, Jim!" Even in his home section of tidewater Virginia, where he is widely acquainted, he is sometimes thought to be the much-photographed Mr. Farley.

It remained, however, for a New York City master of ceremonies to make the mistake recently in a more spectacular manner, Mayor Smith reported today.

He had gone on one of his periodic buying trips to Manhattan, and, after a day spent at style shows and in wholesale houses, sought relaxation with Mrs. Smith in attendance upon a play. He wanted to watch an old schoolmate, Harlee Bell—known in theatrical circles as James Bell—do a bit of acting.

Between acts Mr. Smith made his way to the grill to purchase cigarettes. As he entered, the master of ceremonies signaled for a fanfare from the orchestra, and announced:

"Lad-ees and gen-tlemen, we have with us tonight one of the gre-e-atest ce-leb-rities of the Nation—the honorable James A. Farley, Postmaster General of the United States."

"I had lighted my cigarette by that time," said Mayor Smith, chuckling. "And, had they known their Mr. Farley well enough, they would have realized the error of the announcer. I understand Mr. Farley doesn't smoke."

The mayor of Virginia's peanut capital has the same facial contours and genial expression as the Postmaster General.

Parole Changes Recommended For Maryland

Extension of Term Urged for Commissioner; Rules Would Be Tightened.

By the Associated Press.

Annapolis, Md., March 11.—Appointment of the State parole commissioner for a six instead of a two year term at a salary of $7,500 annually and an increase in the personnel and equipment of the office were recommended today by Gov. Nice's committee to study the recommendations of the Baltimore criminal justice commission.

The committee proposed that the number of parole officers be increased from three to eight and a bookkeeper, statistician, stenographer and file clerk be added to the office force.

An appropriation of $40,000 annually for the office, as compared to the $15,079 allowed in the Governor's budget, was suggested.

Changes recommended by the committee were included in a bill presented in the Senate by J. David Baile (Republican), Carroll County, minority floor leader. Other proposed changes are:

That parole should not be applicable to prisoners sentenced to less than one year of confinement.

That prisoners confined under a sentence of life imprisonment be not eligible for parole until they shall have served at least 15 years in prison.

That no prisoner be eligible for parole until he shall have served one-third of his sentence.

That violation of parole be made a separate offense, indictable and punishable upon conviction by imprisonment for not more than five years.

Youth to Go To Hospital InDeathQuiz

Waddey Will Undergo Sanity Tests in Woman's Slaying.

Mrs. Whaley's Kin Deny Farm Hand Related to the Victim.

By the Associated Press.

Heathsville, Va., March 11.—After taking the testimony of four doctors and several relatives of the accused, Judge Hugh E. Smith in Northumberland County Circuit Court today committed George R. Waddey, jr., 19, charged with the murder of Mrs. Mollie Whaley, of Remo, to the State Hospital for the Criminally Insane for 60 days' observation.

The testimony taken concerned only Waddey's mental and physical condition, and did not relate to the murder charge.

In ordering Waddey's commitment to the hospital, Judge Smith granted a motion by Defense Counsel Raymond Sisson, of Warsaw. The motion was vigorously resisted by Commonwealth's Attorney Robert H. Childton, jr., assisted by State Senator Robert O. Norris, jr.

Mr. Childton said the commitment "does not necessarily mean Waddey is insane."

The Commonwealth's attorney said also that contrary to some report members of the Whaley family said Waddey was no relation to them.

Waddey worked as a farm hand on the Whaley place, and the prosecution asserts he was discharged some time before Mrs. Whaley was shot twice as she fed chickens at her home. One load penetrated her abdomen and the second her head. She died instantly.

Death Sentence Given Utley in Murder Case

By the Associated Press.

Baltimore, March 11.—One month to the day from the time Charles Schimunek was slain in a chain store holdup, Morris T. Utley heard himself condemned to death today for the crime.

Chief Judge Samuel K. Dennis, in criminal court, passed sentence on the 29-year-old former hospital orderly, father of two children, found guilty of murder with no recommendation for mercy.

Utley was captured in Lancaster, Pa., on February 12, the day after Schimunek died of three bullet wounds and numerous knife wounds on the head and shoulders. The slain man had interrupted a chain-store holdup in a building which he owned.

The convicted slayer is a native of Richmond, Va.

It was indicated the defense does not have sufficient funds to pay for transcript of testimony and other expenses of an appeal. The attorneys asserted efforts will be made to raise the needed money.

James Smith Indicted In 'Lard Can' Slaying

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Woodstock, Va., March 11.—Following a 45-minute deliberation a Shenandoah County grand jury found a "true bill" against James A. Smith, 67, alleged slayer of Peter J. Cook, Powells Fort Valley farm.

The killing is alleged to have taken place when Smith was attacked by Cook and his son, Lewis Cook, in a private roadway that divides the Smith and Cook farms. An old discarded lard can that was thrown on the Smith land by Cook is the cause of the fight in which Cook was slain, it is said.

According to Smith, Cook struck him in the head with a stone, cutting a deep gash over the left eye, before he fired. Self-defense will be the plea entered in Smith's behalf, as he was in poor health and under doctor's care at the time of the slaying.

Terps Defeat C. U. Boxers, 5½-2½; Bow to G. U. Five, 25-24

5,500 Fans Look On at Twin Bill

Young, Webb, McCaw, Lombardo and Farrell Victors in Ring.

Gibeau Drops Foul Shot in Last Minute to Win Hectic Tilt.

IN one of the wildest nights of basketball and boxing the District has witnessed in recent years, the University of Maryland grudgingly divided a twin bill with Georgetown and Catholic University before a capacity throng of 5,500 fans last night.

The Terps stormed to a 5½-to-2½ victory in the boxing encounters, while the Hoyas made off with an eye-lash victory on the court, 25 to 24.

Georgetown tripped the Terps in a thrill-drenched court battle that left the fans in a state bordering nervous prosration. A successful foul toss by Don Gibeau gave the Hoyas their winning point in the final minute of play. Only a brief moment before, Vic Willis, the Terp's towering tap-off man, missed two foul shots that would have won the game for his team.

The fights were all that the name implies. Both teams were fighting for keeps and from the opening bell to the second and final knockout in the last bout, the humid air was filled with a cloud of leather.

Young KO's Miro.

Maryland was off to a flying start in boxing when Jimmy Young knocked out Ruben Miro in the opening bout on the program, the 115-pound engagement. Young felled Miro for a nine-count before putting him away with the same punch.

Angy Restaino, of Catholic U., made a great comeback in the second and third rounds with a punishing attack to the head and body to even the score with a decision over Billy Waller. The Maryland boy was penalized for hitting in the clinches, but Restaino won without the aid of the rule book.

Catholic University was presented with a 2-1 lead by Capt. Eddie Thibideau as he pounded his way to a clean-cut decision over Dick Babcock, substituting for the injured Ivan Nedomatsky. Babcock's face was puffed and a trifle red from Thibideau's persistent left jabbing, and his ribs almost bent under the pressure of the C. U. captain's well directed right.

Webb Beats LaSalle.

They were back where they started as "Spike" Webb of Maryland punched Carmen LaSalle, Catholic's inexperienced 145-pounder, around the ring at will to win the fourth bout. LaSalle took an awful whipping, but he took it gamely and was fighting back as best he knew how at the bell.

The cool, consistent Mikh Lombardo administered a fancy lacing to Tom Oliver as Maryland went into a 3-2 lead in the 155-pound bout. Oliver collapsed after leaving the ring. He was out on his feet from early in the second round of what started out to be a roughhouse brawl. Lombardo hit his rival with everything but the referee's shoe and only Oliver's sheer grit saved him being punched to the canvas.

McCaw, Maryland's Southern Conference 175-pound champion, won the nod over Pete Dranginis, substitute for Max Brinkman, in the 165-pound class, giving Maryland a 4-2 lead and assurance of a tie for the match. McCaw obviously was the better of the two, and he outboxed Dranginis, whose only hope was to win by a knockout. He did get in a couple of good licks, but McCaw took them and kept coming back and socking Pete in return.

Gormley-Fleming, Draw.

Johnny Gormley clinched the match for the Terrapins by getting a draw with Red Fleming, of C. U., who was penalized in the last two rounds for fouling. Gormley went almost to his knees in the third round and Fleming, thinking he was still on his feet in a crouch, belabored the Terp light-heavy with a fullisade of harmless blows. This incident lost the bout for the Cardinal.

Al Farrell scored Maryland's final point by winning on a technical knockout over Red Orth, who was making his first start of the season for the Brooklanders. Farrell closed Orth's left eye and bloodied his nose in the second stanza before the fight was halted by the towel.

Terps Off in Front.

Georgeton came through with a smashing 25-24 victory over the Terrapins in one of the wildest, most exciting basket ball games ever played in Ritchie Coliseum. It was a battle of brawn and brain and sheer courage that will live for years to come in the middle of all who saw it.

Maryland held the lead briefly at the outset, running up an 8-5 advantage on its guest before the Hoyas rallied and went ahead, 11-10, on Bodine's field goal. Thereafter the eventual winners were never headed in the grst half, which ended with them on the long end of 20-19.

Three consecutive fouls by Headley and Waters tied it up for Maryland and then gave it a 22-20 advantage as players whirled around the floor in a frenzy and the fans stood and yelled at the voice tops until Referee Paul Menton was obliged to halt play until order was restored.

Hargaden tied it up at 22-all on a neat pot shot close in, but Maryland again seized the lead on a goldbird by Buscher, made on a pass from Vic Willis. It was a nice play.

They struggled and fought with-

Scranton Pinman Bowls 300 Game

Syracuse, N. Y., March 11.—The fourth 300 game in the history of the American Bowling Congress today featured the most exciting day in the national pin classic since it started its thirty-fifth annual renewal.

Carl Mensenberg, Scranton, Pa., carved his name deep into the records of the A. B. C. by bunching 12 strikes in the first game of his singles competition. He followed with games of 203 and 169 for 672, which netted him second place in the solo field.

Shortly after Mensenberg joined the all-time select group of perfect scores, Jacob Graziano, Carbondale, Pa., put together games of 242, 234 and 198 to take the lead wiih 674.

Plate Power Demanded Of Browns

Hornsby Plans Slugging Team; Light Hitters to Be Benched.

The second of a series of stories, gathered first-hand in the spring training camps, on major league prospects for 1935.

By Edward J. Neil.

Associated Press Sports Writer.

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla., March 11.—Whatever else they may be, the St. Louis Browns are going to be hitters this season. The agile fellow afield, if he can't deliver at the plate, gives way to the boy with the belt regardless.

"We lost 5' games last season by one run," says Manager Rogers Hornsby with his chin stuck out into the sunshine, "a third of all the games we played. That won't happen again."

And so he got Johnny Burnett from Cleveland, a hitter always but never considered an exceptional fielder though his averages usually are well up with the best. Johnny, looking fine in practice, in great physical condition, is almost certain to start the season at shortstop, replacing Alan Strange, last year's promising rookie, but only a .233 hitter.

Hornsby Likely to Play.

Into that infield, too, is likely to go Hornsby himself in the effort to batter the Browns out of the second division. If the Red Sox buy Oscar Melillo, veteran second baseman, the Rajah will step in there. He may trot over to third base, where 22-year-old Harlan Clift performed gracefully last year and hit .260, good enough for a first-year man. Hornsby might even have a whirl at first base unless the belting eye of Irving Burns, an outstanding fielder, improves. Burns hit only .257 in 1934.

Hornsby feels that at 38 his playing days can't be over. The ankle he broke with the Cubs is strong, and there has been no sign of the heel injury that bothered him for years, necessitating one operation. He's trim and solid, and he still hits the fences and areas beyond on the fly.

While the Browns' pitching is as strong as any department of the team, and the catching is in husky, capable hands with Rollie Hemsley and Frank Grube around, there's considerable question about the outfield, where someone must fill

Fred Schulte Opens Fight For Job

Pounds Two Hurlers in Rebuttal to Powell's Bid for Position.

Linke Is Highly Pleased With His Arm After Stay on Mound.

By Shirley L. Povich.

A Staff Correspondent.

BILOXI, Miss., March 11.—Fred Schulte today began his rebuttal in the case of Powell vs Schulte on which hinges the occupancy of the center field job with the Washington Club. In manner eloquent and with a murderous swing, he rammed out a stream of base hits in his own behalf and left an obviously pleasing impression upon the one-man jury composed of Manager Bucky Harris.

The strong, silent man of the team, who was tending his bowling alley business in Belvidere, Ill., during the last two weeks while young Powell occupied the stage here, immediately busied himself with the task at hand. Reports of Powell's threats to evict him as the club's regular center fielder had reached even the wooded fastnesses of Belvidere.

Schulte reported here last night, seemingly ready for the battle, with not an ounce of surplus flesh on his imposing frame. At the ball park this morning, he smacked Ed Linke's first pitch on the nose with a crack that was heard in Mexico City, and continued to belt the ball for distances that only Freddie Sington has approached in Biloxi this spring.

Pounds Linke, Hadley.

In contrast to the pop-up performance of Lyn Lary, Buddy Myer and Joe Kuhel, who had not yet attuned their batting eye in their first day of practice last week, Schulte slugging the ball straight away and shot after shot dropped into distant areas despite the pitching of Ed Linke and Bump Hadley, the two regulars who are farthest along the road toward midseason form.

Out of the corner of his eye, Schulte was seen to observe the reactions of Manager Harris and Powell on his each turn at the plate. It was with a new-found swagger that he took his final wallops.

Competition is new for Schulte. In his last seven years in the majors with the Browns and the Nats, the center field job has been synonymous with his name. His lifetime batting average is barely below .300 and his fielding is excelled only by Sammy West, of the Browns, and Flit Cramer, of the A's.

Faces Distinct Threat.

But in Powell he faces a distinct threat. With his pitchers still a question mark, Manager Harris is intent on adding batting strength to his outfield. In Powell, he possesses a rookie who bears all the earmarks of a sensation.

Powell lacks the distance in his wallops that Schulte packs, but his

Oglethorpe Back In S. I. A. A. Ranks

2 Gridmen Were Eligible, Investigation Reveals.

Georgetown, Ky., March 11.—Reinstatement of Oglethorpe University of Atlanta into the ranks of the S. I. A. A. was announced today. Member teams of the S. I. A. A. were prohibited, at a meeting in December, from playing Oglethorpe in football because of alleged disability of two of the Georgians' players.

Secretary Hinton said today the committee had found upon further investigation that the players in question were eligible for athletic competition.

Browns, Outhit, Beat Giants In Twelfth

Pass With Bases Filled Is Decisive; Winners Get Three Safeties.

By the Associated Press.

MIAMI, March 11.—Although held to three hits by four New York pitchers, including Hal Schumacher and Leroy Parmelee, the St. Louis Browns nosed out the Giants, 2 to 1, in a 12-inning battle today.

A pass by John Leonardo with the bases full after Joe Martin, rookie third baseman, had fumbled a grounder, forced John Burnett in with the deciding run. The Giants got to Ivy Paul Andrews, Bob Weiland and Dick Coffman for six hits, but they all came in separate innings except in the eighth, when Danning tripled and Al Smith cracked out a double to score the National Leaguers' only run.

Braves' Boss Is Irate.

St. Petersburg, Fla., March 11 (U.P.).—Irate at the crushing defeat scored by the Cincinnati Reds over the Braves, Manager Bill McKechnie, of the Boston Club, whipped his charges through three hours of practice today, forcing them to miss their lunch. McKechnie kept the men "on the hop" throughout the lengthy bat and field practice.

Rabbit Maranville took part in fielding practice. It was the first workout for the veteran player, who was on the sidelines last season because of a broken leg. Maranville handled himself perfectly.

McKechnie tacked a memo on the bulletin board advising all unsigned players to stay out of uniform until they do sign.

Lombardi, Hafey Report.

Tampa, Fla., March 11 (U.P.).—Catcher Ernie Lombardi and Outelder Chick Hafey arrived at the Cincinnati Reds camp today, completing the roster. Neither, however, has signed his 1935 contract.

Campbell Reaches 50; Is Kept in Bed by Cold

Daytona Beach, Fla., March 11 (AP). A heavy cold confined Sir Malcolm Campbell to his bed today on his fiftieth birthday, giving him no chance to continue his efforts to reach 300 miles an hour in his racing car, Bluebird.

He staggered down to lunch, wheezing and sniffling and found his table piled with gifts, most of them comedy contributions from his friends, designed to increase Bluebird's speed above its new mark of 278.816 miles an hour, and decrease his golf game, which hovers around an even 100.

Injury Retires Ruth; Cronin Picks Lineup

By the Associated Press.

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla., March 11.—A strained right arm forced Babe Ruth to make an early exit from today's Boston Braves' practice. The mighty slugger said he first felt the painful injury during the exhibition games against the Cincinnati Reds and aggravated it by participating in today's batting drill.

"It's nothing to worry about," he told Manager Bill McKechnie. "I have the same trouble every spring, which probably accounts for my poor hitting in the training comp every year."

Ruth's teammates feared that their box-office ace would be forced to remain out of the series with the Yankees, which opens here Saturday.

"Don't worry about that," he assured them. "I'll be in there against my old gang and I'll do more than my share, too. I wouldn't miss facing the Yanks if I had to go to bat in a wheel chair.

Werber Bats Second.

By the Associated Press.

Sarasota, Fla., March 11.—Manager Joe Cronin today seletced the Boston Red Sox starting line-up for the opening exhibition game with the Giants at Miami on Wednesday.

Al Niemiec, second base, has been assigned to the lead-off position, followed by Bill Werber, third base; Roy Johnson, left field; Cronin, shortstop; Moose Solters, center field; Dusty Cooke, right field; Ellie Dahlgren, first base, and whatever batterymen Cronin selects.

Howell Held Promising.

Lakeland, Fla., March 11 (AP).—Manager Mickey Cochrane got a line on the 1935 prospects of the Detroit Tigers today as his full squad worked out for the first time. Their performance convinced him, he said, of four things:

1. Francis (Salty) Parker, Beaumont shortstop, can field better than ever, but has not improved his hitting by batting left-handed.
2. Millard (Dixie) Howell, University of Alabama athlete, has the makings of a great outfielder.
3. Chester Morgan, Beaumont outfielder, is a strong hitter but uncertain in the field.
4. The veteran "Goose" Goslin can still be depended upon to set the pace for the youngsters.

Tribe Rookies Drilled.

New Orleans, March 11 (AP).—Walter Johnson started today to correct faults the Cleveland Indians' rookies showed in the Sabbath clash with the New Orleans Pelicans.

Al Milnar, newly acquired southpaw, was turned over to trainers to break him of a "minor league balk." For three frames, Milnar repeatedly committed infractions in this respect which major loop base runners could convert into extra bases.

Baseball Regains Place At St. John's College

Annapolis, Md., March 11 (AP).—After a lapse fo seven years, a varsity St. John's College baseball squad will take the diamond this week preparatory to a 13-game schedule.

This will mark the first time since 1928 that baseball will be a Johnnie's major sport. Last year the athletic council gave baseball a trial as a yearling minor sport. Students paid for equipment and expenses. They won in the majoriyt of contests played and the council was fvaorably impressed. It elevated the game to a major sport.

Mangin, Bell Advance in Net Play

Martin Is Beaten Easily; Lieut. Watt Extends His Rival.

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, March 11.—In a setting of solitary grandeur, preferred performers continued their parade of progress through the second round of the men's national indoor tennis championship today, pushing over their opposition without the loss of a set.

The favorites to meet for the championship Saturday, Gregory S. Mangin and Berkeley Bell, seeded first and second, respectively, advanced to the third round in contrasting fashions.

Bell, ranked seventh in the Nation and topping the upper half of the draw, made a runaway of his engagement with William Martin, of New York, winning 6—0, 6—2.

Mangin underwent a sound test of all his equipment by Lieut. R. Morgan Watt, of the United States Navy. Watt made the twice former indoor champion run from side to side with crisp angled volleys before he succumbed to Mangin's general all-around superiority, 6—4, 7—5.

Maureen Orcutt's 77 Tops Field at Belleair

Belleair, Fla., March 11 (AP).—Maureen Orcutt, Englewood, N. J., negotiated the windswept championship course today in 77 strokes to lead a strong field of women players in the annual Belleair championship.

Jean Bauer, Providence, R. I., whom she beat in the final at St. Augustine last week, was her nearest rival at 86, nine strokes behind.

Gabby Hartnett Back, Cubs Hold Long Drill

Avalon, Calif., March 11 (AP).—The Chicago Cubs took advantage of the best weather they have seen since the yreached quarters, to get a long, spirited workout today. Gabby Hartnett, who has been kept idle by a severe cold, returned to action.

Cards Face Phillies.

Bradenton, Fla., March 11 (AP).—With Joe Medwick signed and at work, the St. Louis Cardinals took their final workout today before opening their spring exhibition schedule tomorrow with the Phillies.

Picard, Revolta Win Four-Ball Golf Title

Runyan, Smith Defeated, 1 Up, in Play-Off at Miami Course.

By the Associated Press.

MIAMI, March 11.—Henry Picard and Johnny Revolta, the sensational "dark horse" team of the international four-ball golf tournament, today won first money by squeezing out a 1-up victory over Paul Runyan and Horton Smith in an 18-hole play-off.

Three up at the turn, the winners saw their edge dwindle to a mere hole as Runyan, the steady New Yorker, twice carded brilliant birdies. For a time it appeared as if Smith and Runyan were about to repeat the thrilling last-nine drive that carried them to a draw in the regular 36-hole final match yesterday.

But throughout the final four

3 Ways Open For Fight of Maxies

Garden, Milk Fund or Berlin May Stage Title Bout.

Johnston Would Go to Court, if Necessary, to Get Battle.

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, March 11.—Max Schmeling's fine comeback against Steve Hamas is pretty sure to earn the "Black Uhlan" a crack at Max Baer's title this summer, but whether the match will be staged here or abroad remains in doubt.

There are three possibilities:

One is that the two heavies will perform under the banner of Madison Square Garden, which claims to have both tied up by contracts.

Another is that Mike Jacobs will bag the plum for Mrs. W. R. Hearst's milk fund. Baer and his manager, Ancil Hoffman, have sworn they will never fight again for the Garden, contract or no contract. On the other hand, they are very friendly with Jacobs and his co-promoters.

May Fight in Berlin.

The third possibility is the champion will accept a $300,000 guarantee for an international joust with Schmeling in Berlin, in which event the German government will subsidize the bout.

James J. Johnston, Garden matchmaker, says he will not hestitate to ask the courts to enforce his contract rights provided Schmeling stands out as the logical heavyweight challenger when the open air season rolls around.

"That's a long way off," Johnston said. "Lots of things can happen, I would want Schmeling to dispose of another candidate before tossing him in with Baer. Carnera and Lasky are not out of the running, either."

Soft Pedals Talk.

With the forthcoming Primo Carnera-Ray Impellittiere and Art Lasky-James J. Braddock gates to worry about, Johnston was disposed to soft pedal much talk of a Baer-Schmeling fight, but he made it plain he will be in the running for a heavyweight championship bout this summer if the outdoor season finds Schmeling topping the field of challengers.

Jacobs is not likely to be so particular. He is not harassed by elimination tournaments. He believes Baer vs. Schmeling is a fistic "natural" and the thing a jaded fight public has been waiting for. He is expected to lose no time try-

Terry Expects Giants to Win Flag by 5 Games

By Jimmy Powers.

A Special Correspondent.

MIAMI, March 11.—At great risk of life and limb your correspondent clambered up a bourgainvillae vine to Manager Bill Terry's penthouse overlooking the chalky-green waters of Biscayne Bay. We scrambled over the railing under the striped-canvas awning and there, in the most lavish baseball training headquarters in the country, we put the vacuum on the New York Giants' pilot, fearless Willie, the big oil-and-gas magnate from Memphis. The Giant pennant chances, ratings of the rival clubs, Babe Ruth, Bill McKechnie, Dizzy Dean—we discussed them all and the Q and A testimony is herewith recorded for posterity.

P. S.—The questions are ours; the answers are Bill's.

Q. Do you really think the Giants will win this year or is that just the customary spring okra soup for fan consumption up North?

A. I think the Giants will win by at least five full games. We scheduled 154 games last year, didn't we? And two more victories would have eased us in.

Q. Who is your most valuable pitcher?

A. Carl Hubbell. With Dick Bartell, Kiddo Davis and Mark Koenig hitting behind him, he'll win close to 25 games. He won 21 last year.

Q. What one player do you figure has added the most fielding and hitting strength to your line-up?

A. Dick Bartell. He's even better than I hoped he would be. He's been making plays already against the Athletics and Browns that were knockouts and he's hitting in mid-season form. He is well worth the $125,000 I paid for him.

Q. Some of us reporters are a bit suspicious of Dick. We figure him to be another "Philadelphia hitter." What say?

A. Don't you believe it; he was a .300 hitter in that big Pittsburgh park, too.

Q. What club or what individual is the Giants' biggest enemy?

A. The Cardinals and Dizzy Dean. Diz murdered us last year. Our only hope is that he gets knocked down by a runaway horse, hit by a taxicab or kidnaped by Mae West. I'm open to any proposition that will remove him from our front lawn at the Polo Grounds.

Q. Will Babe Ruth help the Braves and hurt the Giants?

A. Certainly. He'll find the short right field walls at the Polo Grounds and Baker Field, Philadelphia, easy pickings. The Braves are 25 per cent stronger with that big fellow hitting for them. He might get lucky and take a few games away from us, but we'll profit on a fatter slice of gate receipts.

Q. Won't a lot of sympathy for Bill McKechnie develop? How will rival players look upon him and Babe?

A. I feel sorry for Bill—but that's life. If a fellow comes along powerful enough to take your job away from you he gets it and deserves it, that's all. There's no room for sentiment in baseball. They come and they go, as old Uncle Robby used to say.

Q. What team is most apt to develop into a dark horse this summer?

A. The Phillies. Manager Jimmy Wilson is shrewd, a good trader and a clever juggler of talent. He gets more baseball miles per gallon than any fellow I've ever seen.

Q. What about the Dodgers? Will they be together? Can they finish in first division?

A. Please (here Mr. Terry held his hands together and pretended to bow his head in silent prayer), please don't even mention that terrible name—Dodgers.

Fidelis Wins Feature Before 8,000 as Tropical Park Opens

Two-Length Victory to Gelding

Fred Alger, Owner of Azucar, Sees Sabula Finish Third.

By the Associated Press.

TROPICAL PARK, Fla., March 11.—Running right back to his good second to Howard in the Jockey Club handicap at Hialeah, B. N. Kane's Fidelis today captured the Orange Blossom handicap, feature of the local opening, as the last lap of the Florida season got under way. More than 8,000 fans saw Wayne Wright take the 4-year-old gelding to the front in the run to the first turn and lead the remainder of the one-mile trip.

Fidelis was under pressure as he crossed the wire two lengths clear of the Brentwood Stable's elderly mare, Late Date. Fred Alger, of Detroit, whose Azucar won the Santa Anita handicap, saw his mare, Sabula, race to the show, another two lengths away.

Track Is Slower.

The racing strip, with a new layer of top soil, was at least a full second slower than it was at the early winter meeting here. Fidelis, under a mere 107 pounds, completed his journey in 1:39.

Golden Rock 2d had enough of the winner's speed after sampling it to the far turn. Beaver Dam then took a brief whirl at trying to catch the leader, but Wright had too much horse under him and another challenge faded. Sabula and Late Date then made stretch bids, with the latter finishing fast enough to force Fidelis to a drive.

Fidelis, a $3.80 for $2 favorite in the field of five, collected $1,430 for Owner Kane.

Blue Donna Victor.

The distinction of winning the first race of the meeting went to L. E. Keiffer's Blue Donna, J. Pollard up. A dozen maiden fillies clashed in the 4-furlong dash, the first half-mile test of the season for 2-year-olds. Blue Donna overtook the pace-making Festoon in the short stretch, winning by a length and a half from Flopsie, which also collared Festoon in the late stages. The winner paid $14.30 and her time was 0:48 1-5. Flopsie was favorite.

Form players enjoyed their initial success of the new session when Broadsword, paying $5.50, came from behind in the second race to win by a half-length from Trey. Feudal Lord was third, two lengths farther back. El Bandido stole a wide early advantage, but stopped badly when Trey challenged. The latter, although holding on fairly well, was no match for Broadsword when Earl Porter, riding over the track that marked his climb to fame as an apprentice, called on the Winfrey color bearer.

Jakovia Triumphs.

M. J. Brennan, one that had worked fast, was supposed to be a good thing, which he wasn't, in the third contest. The gelding, after being backed down to odds-on, never could get to the front as expected and had to be content with second money behind Jakovia. Eddie Arcaro had the latter in the van from end to end, scoring by a length to return $18.40. M. J. Brennan was a like margin before River Rose.

Jack Chevigny merely galloped away from an ordinary band of platers in the fourth. Although the colt ran the 1 mile in the slow time of 1:42 2-5, that mark was fast enough to enable the $6.60 choice to triumph by five lengths. Bird Lore, making his first start of the winter, fought it out with Lady Laura and saved the place by a nose.

Wright Rides Double.

Another odds-on choice made good with the galloping success of Civil War in the sixth event. Wayne Wright, earning a double, put the 2-to-5 shot into early command and had nothing to fear, the Wise Counsellor colt coasting home by a half dozen lengths. Fake got up in the short stretch to gain the place over the staggering Enthusiasm by three lengths.

Wright came within a nose of completing a triple when his mount in the last race, Big Red, barely lost out to Black Watch. Relativity was third. Black Watch paid $9.00.

The handle for the day was $199,678.

JAKOVIA broke well in her stride, was kept on the inside all the way, and drew away in final sixteenth. M. J. BRENNAN lacked his early speed, came wide in stretch, but was no match for the winner. RIVER ROSE came through on inside and finished fast. SOCK DOLOGER closed a big gap. CHARMED EYES had no mishap. LADY MONTREAL had speed for three furlongs, then tired.

JACK CHEVIGNY got away well, was allowed to rate along to the far turn, where he went up with a rush on inside, took lead turning out of back stretch, drew away easily around turn. BIRD LORE displayed keen speed and ran a good race for his first effort. LADY LAURA, mean at the rate, broke fast, showed good speed, and held on well. ARAKAY ran a fair race. GOLDPIN failed to close any ground.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—$3.80, $2.40, $2.20; LATE DATE, $4.20, $3.00; SABULA, $2.60.

FIDELIS was much the best. He went to the front going into first turn and, rated along to stretch, drew out, but tired and had to be ridden hard to stall off the determined bid of LATE DATE. The latter galloped much back of the field, came wide entering stretch, and finished with a rush. SABULA moved up under restraint, but tired suddenly. BEAVER DAM ran well up all the way. GOLDEN ROCK II displayed keen speed and is about ready to win a race.

ENTHUSIASM was hustled along all the way. CHIEF MOURNER worked his way up and finished very fast. DANCING LADY was kept well out in the middle of track for entire trip. CANTERBOY tired.

Investigation and Company F Win Easily in Tourney Debuts

Vincent Star As Sleuths Triumph

Burgess and Thompsons in Spotlight; Three Games Tonight.

LIVING up to their reputations as seasoned teams, Bureau of Investigation and Company F, Hyattsville, made impressive debuts in the unlimited division of the District A. A. U. basket ball tournament held under the auspices of The Washington Post at Tech High School's gym, last night.

Investigation, strongly favored to reach the semifinals and perhaps the finals, eliminated a woefully weak Fort Humphreys outfit under an avalanche of field goals, winning by 58 to 12.

Company F conquered McLean A. C., 45-31 without extending itself in any way.

In a 145-pound game, which opened the night's fireworks, Takoma Boys' Club showed to advantage in putting out Athliso, 44-30.

Tonight there will be more activity in the A. A. U. games. Jewish Community Center meets Acacia at 8:30 and Mount Vernon takes on Rinaldi Tailors at 9:30 in the unlimited division. In the 145-pound opener, Northeast Boys' Club faces St. Martin's at 7:30. J. C. C., Rinaldi, Mount Vernon and Acacia were impressive in victories last week and hot games are forecast.

out a score through the next few minutes of an exhaustive battle that defied description. Then "Sis" Esenstadt, a substitute Hoya forward, sank one from just beyond the foul zone and it was tied up again at 24-all.

Scarcely a minute of play remained when Don Gibeau drew a foul and converted it for the winning point. He missed a second shot and the resulting scramble for the sphere knocked it out of bounds. Before they could get a play started the gun barked, giving Georgetown the victory that avenged its 6-0 defeat by Maryland in football.

Penn Avenue Cagemen Win in State Tourney

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Cumberland, Md., March 11.—Pennsylvania Avenue High of this city won its first round in the State championship in the State playground basket ball tournament by eliminating Oakland High, Garret County champion, at the State Armory here, 77-6. The local squad scored at will to pile up the largest total of any game this season.

Fifteen local players saw service and all but one made at least a point. The visitors were outclassed in weight, height and experience.

Penn plays Middletown High, Frederick County champion, winner over Franklin High, Baltimore County, at Hagerstown, next Thursday.

Batting Left-Handed, Chapman Pounds 'Em

St. Petersburg, Fla., March 11 (AP).—Ben Chapman, who has a yearning to develop into a turn-around hitter, showed Manager Joe McCarthy that he was no novice at swinging from the port side of the plate today as the New York Yankees started preparation for the opening of the exhibition series with their former teammate, Babe Ruth, and his Boston Braves Saturday.

The fleet Yankee outfielder got considerable distance batting left-handed, several of his drives carrying to the extreme corner of right-field. With the exception of Charlie Ruffing, every member of the club was on hand for the two-hour drill.

Dodgers Varsity Wins, Mungo Shows Form

Orlando, Fla., March 11 (AP).—The big four of the Brooklyn Dodgers' pitching staff saw action today as the Flatbush variety nosed out the Scrubs, 2 to 1, in the ninth inning of an interclub affair.

Van Mungo, No. 1 man of the hurling corps, looked impressive as he held the Scrubs to one hit, a two-bagger by Ken Strong, during the four innings he worked.

G. U. Prep Nine Lists 17 Tilts For Season

Team Is First to Practice; Catcher Thompson Splits Finger.

"FIRST come, first served" means exactly that to the Georgetown Prep baseball team. First high or prep school to take to the diamond in or around the District, the Garrett Parkers yesterday also became the first to be hit by injury when Bill Thompson, in line for plenty of service as a catcher, split the middle finger on his left hand. The mishap puts Thompson on the bench for well over a month.

With only one catcher left, Squire Pennington, Coach Joe Gardner faces the prospect of opening the season April 1 rather vulnerable at the backstop post. The schedule, released yesterday, is one of the hardest Georgetown Prep has faced in several years and shows an expansion over last year's program by several games. Among the 17 games listed are two with Western High and one each with Tech Central and Roosevelt.

Is Lacking Reserves.

Although Pennington gives the team veteran balance behind the bat, the reserve material here is wanting. In the box, Capt. Billy Dettweiler, DeSales Powell and Lloyd Rice stand as the likely trio to bear the pitching burden with Powell able to play first base, Dettweiler shortstop and Rice the outfield if necessary.

Renahan has the inside track on second base, with Parks and Murphy fighting it out for shortstop and Hughes Spalding and Morse for third base although Spalding held down the hot corner considerably last year. Kiser, Bobby Troutman, Bob O'Shaughnessy, Nesecke and Byrd are among the prominent outfield candidates.

The schedule:

April 1, Bethesda-Chevy Chase, at Garrett Park; 3, Rockville High (tentative); 5, Western, at Western; 8, Devitt, at Garrett Park; 10, Charlotte Hall, at Garrett Park; 12, Gilman, at Baltimore.

May 1, St. Alban's, at St. Alban's; 3, Tech, at Georgetown Prep; 6, Loyola of Baltimore, at Garrett Park; 8, Charlotte Hall, at Charlotte Hall; 10, Takoma-Silver Spring, at Garret Park; 13, Central, at Georgetown Prep; 15, Loyola, at Baltimore; 17, Gettysburg High, at Gettysburg, Pa.; 20, Roosevelt, at Roosevelt; 22, Friends, at Garrett Park; 24, Western, at Garrett Park.

Westminster's Coach May Give Up Position

New Wilmington, Pa., March 11 (AP).—Westminster College may be in the market for a football coach for next year despite the successful regime inaugurated by the Gilbane brothers at New Wilmington last fall.

The athletic council has disclosed that head skipper Bill Gilbane, former Brown star, may decide to drop coaching and enter business with his father, a Providence, R. I., contractor. The council expects definite word from Gilbane soon.

The meeting will start at 2 p. m., and the following first and second team captains have been requested to attend:

Powers and Mrs. J. H. Bullock.

Chevy Chase won the first team championship and Beaver Dam second team honors last season.

Rain forced postponement yesterday of the professional sweepstakes at Congressional Country Club to March 25. Next Monday a sweepstakes will be held at Indian Spring following the annual meeting of the Middle Atlantic P. G. A.

Meanwhile, Roland Mackenzie, and his young assistant, Clagett Stevens, shaped up for future matches with a sparkling round over the Congressional layout. Both scored 71's, one below par, while playing with Walter (Red) Cunningham, Burning Tree pro, and Troy Carmichael. Cunningham had a 75, and Carmichael an 82. After going out in 38, Mackenzie came home in 33, aided by birdies on the sixteenth and seventeenth. Stevens toured the incoming nine in 34.

A new golfing program for 1935 will be announced tonight at the annual membership dinner at Beaver Dam Country Club. More than 300 reservations have been received. President Oscar T. Wright, Edward Brashears and S. G. Leoffler, the latter two chief stockholders, will be among the guests of honor, and will make known their plans for the season.

Rep. Caldwell Star at Virginia After Earning 'Ole Miss' Glory

By Dillon Graham.

Associated Press Sports Writer.

REPRESENTATIVE MILLARD CALDWELL, of Florida, a husky 6-footer, was a star football tackle at two Dixie schools.

Earning an All-Southern rating at the University of Mississippi, he withdrew to join the Army and, after the World War, went to the University of Virginia, where he wound up his gridiron career.

He played first base and pitched on Mississippi's baseball team and was a center in basket ball.

Representative Emmet O'Neal, of the Blue Grass State, can't remember when he's missed a Kentucky Derby . . . He likes to stand near the far end of the track and see the thoroughbreds dash around the last curve and head into the home stretch.

Bewhiskered Representative George Tinkham, of Massachusetts, has hunted big game in Africa, Java and other distant lands . . . His idea of a vacation is a hunting trip . . . Vice President John Garner is another enthusiastic Nimrod.

Representative Hamilton Fish, of New York, is one of the few southpaw golfers in Congress . . . He has broken 90 several times . . . Says he is a better tennis player.

A. A. U. Boxing Will Open Tomorrow

Wide Open Struggles for Titles in All Classes; Heavies Promising.

ENTRIES closed last night for the piece de resistance of amateur cauliflower cultivation—the District A. A. U. boxing championship tournament to be held at Catholic University tomorrow, Thursday and Saturday nights.

The committee in charge of registrations will scan each entry with a collective eagle eye today, rejecting all applicants who do not meet with approval, and announce the complete list tomorrow morning.

The pairings will be made immediately following the weighing-in period, which is from 4 to 6 p. m. tomorrow night. After that, the youngsters will be ready to swap wallops for the sake of dear old A. A. U. and charity which will receive a large portion of the net proceeds.

This year's tournament promises to be the most wide open in the history of amateur boxing in the District. While many of last year's champions will attempt to retain their laurels, not one will rule as an overwhelming favorite.

112-Pound Class Promising.

The 112-pound class, with a good entry list, is wide open to all competition. George Pickerel, Olympic Club's 112-pounder last year, has advanced to the 118-pound class this season and promises to rule a slight favorite in the heavier division.

With Mike Tardugno, last year's 126-pound champion having deserted the amateur ranks, Lou Gevinson generally is rated the outstanding featherweight entered. Leon Shub, 1934 lightweight titleholder, will be unable to compete this year, leaving the 135-pound field open to any and all entrants.

Pete Di Maggio, winner of the welterweight championship last year, has turned professional in the meantime, leaving Steve Thompson, 1934 160-pound titleholder, in undisputed possession of the favored position in the 147-pound division. Bobby Rowson, of Columbus, also will rank as a strong contender for the vacated welterweight title.

With large entry lists in the 160-pound and 175-pound classes, anything may happen and no particular boxer has yet been installed a favorite.

Fireworks Among Heavyweights.

The heavyweight division promises much fireworks. Dale Prather, last year's champion, was defeated in a recent meet at the Auditorium by Bob Coughlin, of the Olympic A. C. It generally is conceded that George Cox is capable of taking the measure of Coughlin, which should make him champion. But, and a big but, there is George Chappelle, the fighting cop, to be considered as a very threatening dark horse. All of which should make for some merry entertainment.

Contrary to general opinion, the semifinal and final bouts of the competition will not necessarily produce the best fisticuffing of the tournament. If the draw decrees, many of the best battles of the tournament should take place in the opening rounds when all the contestants are fresh and full of wim, wigor and witality.

Borotra Sees British Cup Victory

Will Retain Title if Berry Does Not Join Pros, French Ace Says.

By the United Press.

PARIS, March 11.—Great Britain will retain the Davis Cup if Fred Perry has not joined the pro ranks by July, when the challenge round should bring together the defender and the Australians, Jean Borotra predicted today.

"The British and Australian teams are on a par," Borotra said. "But the British will win because they will go into the fray fresh while the Australians will be fatigued after fighting their way through the eliminations which will be one of the toughest in years."

The Basque dismissed the chances of the United States, "whose team is composed of untried youngsters" and his own countrymen, whom he thinks will be eliminated in the first round by the Australians.

Win 49th Crown.

Borotra, who recently won the French indoor singles title for the tenth time, making it the forty-ninth net crown of his career, declared he would be a member of the French Davis Cup team. He and "Toto" Brugnon, the two remaining members of the original four musketeers, who brought the cup to France and kept it there for six consecutive years, will carry the doubles burden again. Christian Boussus, frail left-hander, and Andre Merlin, recovering from an injured leg, will represent France in the singles. Marcel Bernard, promising left-hander, will be on the squad and will play if Merlin has not recovered in time.

Borotra, who has always been a great favorite in the United States, said he had hoped until the very last moment to participate in the current United States indoor championships, but "business came first."

Turning to the subject of pro tennis, Borotra was of the opinion that the tension between the moneyed players and the simonpures was slowly being slackened and that sometime "in the far future" he saw the possibility of an open tourney along the lines of those held at the present time in golf.

Against Concessions.

"I don't think that any further concessions should be made to the amateurs, however," he said. "Either an athlete is an amateur or a pro. Perry should not be permitted to act in films and still retain his amateur status. The French federation, of which I am vice president, will oppose it. As the motion requires a two-thirds majority, I don't see how it will pass the international body."

Asked to pick the best tennis players he ever saw in action, Borotra named without hesitation Bill Tilden, Norman Brookes, Henri Cochet and Rene Lacoste. These four, he said, were about equal with no preference to be shown.

He deliberately left Ellsworth Vines, of California, out of the list.

"Vines may eventually take his place among the greatest stars of all time," he said, "but he is still young and hasn't had the time to establish his right to that claim. He has the best service I have ever seen and the execution of his strokes is marvelous. He must still show improvement and his ability as a fighter before I will place him in my list of really great."

Hornsby Demands Power at Plate

the shoes of Bruce Campbell, a top-notch hitter and fielder, traded to Cleveland in the deal that brought Southpaw Bob Weiland and Burnett to St. Louis.

West Is Fixture.

Sam West, who led the club with a .326 average last season, is a fixture in center. Left belongs to Ray Pepper, burly Alabaman, who drove in 101 runs with an average of .298. Debs Garms, who batted .292, but doesn't field so well, is locked in a duel with Roy (Beau) Bell, a big rookie from Galveston, who has caught Hornsby's eye with his clouting. Bell hit .337 in the minors last season. Clarence Mueller, from Buffalo, and Larry Bettencourt, up on option from San Antonio, are possibilities. Bettencourt particularly is a powerhouse, but there's a hitch in his batting swing that has Hornsby working hours with him.

The Rajah is pleased and satisfied with his pitchers. His "Big Five" consists of Buck Newsome, George Blaeholder, Dick Coffman, Jack Knott and Weiland, the first dependable starting left-hander Hornsby has had since he took over the Browns. Only Knott, in his first year up, bettered .500, winning 10 and losing 3.

May Carry Thomas.

In addition the Browns probably will carry Fay Thomas, who was with the Giants in 1927 when Hornsby served under John McGraw, Howard Mills, a left-hander from San Antonio, and Elton Walkup, Milwaukee right-hand rookie. Thomas in particular is Hornsby's hope. A big right-hander, with everything necessary in his equipment, Thomas won 28 and lost only 4 with Los Angeles last season, but in previous major league trials he has always just lacked something.

"We might get into the first division with the Indians, Tigers and Yankees, which looks like the first three to me," says Hornsby. "But wherever we are we'll be fighting. They can't stay with me and not hustle. That's the least they can give you—the best they've got."

Browning Calls O'Mahoney 'Finest'

Irish Matman Has Eyes on Londos Bout; Would Draw 80,000.

By John J. Romano.

A Special Correspondent.

NEW YORK, March 11.—Daniel O'Mahoney is a recent arrival from the Shamrock-strewn, tight little isle. He is a member of the Irish Free State army and is over here on furlough to wrest the world's grunt-and-groan title from Jim Londos.

What O'Mahoney lacks in experience he more than makes up in speed and strength, according to Jim Browning, a former champion. Browning considers the Irish grappler the finest man on the mat he has seen in years and predicts all sorts of nice things for the brawny son of Erin.

O'Mahoney shapes up like the ideal wrestler. Well over 6 feet and tilting the beam at 217 pounds, he is a real handful when he clutches an opponent's hand and twirls him around in what is called "the Gaelic spin-wheel." The wrestling world has always identified a prominent wrestler by some special hold.

Prominent Holds.

There was Frank Gotch with his torturing toe-hold; Joe Stecher and his famous body-scissors; Gus Sonnenberg and his billygoat flying tackle; Jim Browning's airplane spin, and Jim Londos' neckgrip, the nearest thing to the outlawed strangle-hold fans have seen in years. No one but O'Mahoney's victims can tell how effective Danny's "Gaelic spin-wheel" is. It is showy and spectacular and that seems enough to satisfy the fans who go to see the Irish Adonis pin a rival's shoulders to the mat.

O'Mahoney's arrival in this country was well trumpeted in advance. Jack Dempsey is reported to have offered Danno $50,000 a year to try his hand at the boxing game. The Free Stater is considered just as handy with his clenched fists as he is with the many wrestling holds he uses to subdue his rivals. Danno justly spurned the offer since he has made more than that, with less physical punishment, in the first five contests he had in this country.

16,000 Saw Him Win.

O'Mahoney's manager wisely chose Boston, the Irish capital of America, for his debut. More than 16,000 wrestling addicts and true sons of Ireland traveled miles to see O'Mahoney throw his man. Since then his appearances on the mat have averaged fully 15,000 each show.

It will not be difficult to extend the furlough granted O'Mahoney should he qualify, which seems certain, for a match with Jim Londos. Jack Curley plans to use the Madison Square Garden Bowl for the match and from present indications the 80,000 capacity will be taxed to the limit to see the stalwart son of ancient Greece pit his experience against the ambitious youth from the Irish Free State.

Faces Grobmier Here.

Baltimore College Enters Swim Meet

Renewal of Its Battle With Central Promised.

Renewal of the neck-and-neck race for team honors which they waged in the South Atlantic interscholastics in Baltimore last week is promised for the swimming teams of Central High School and Baltimore City College Saturday when they meet again in the annual South Atlantic high school championships in the Shoreham pool.

The entries of the Baltimore school, received yesterday by A. Earle Weeks, secretary of the District A. A. U. swimming committee, show a small army of 22 coming to take another crack at Central and also to defend the championship they won last year.

Central is South Atlantic interscholastic champ and Baltimore City is South Atlantic high school titleholder.

Other schools entered will be Gwynn Falls School of Baltimore, Calvert Hall of Baltimore, Western and Eastern of Washington and Bethesda-Chevy Chase. Central is entering 28 men.

Stocks Tumble 1 to 3 Points, Low for Year

Drop of Cotton and Grain Held Responsible for Market Decline.

By the Associated Press.

New York, March 11.—The stock market ran into rough going as cotton took a nose dive today, and ended with some issues off 1 to 3 points.

The market started off bravely enough, with several industrials creeping up fractions to a point, as week-end business news stressed further quickening of automobile manufacturing and last week's set-up in steel production, which was later clouded by the production estimate for this week.

When cotton tumbled $7.90 to $9.35 a bale, however, and wheat and corn dipped 2 cents or more, stocks quickly gave up their gains, and issues which it was thought would be adversely affected by lower farm purchasing power, such as rails, farm implements, merchandising issues, were sold.

Total sales ran to 799,834 shares. The Associated Press average of 60 stocks dipped 0.7 to 35.7, a new low for 1935, and only 0.8 of a point above the 1934 low. The long depressed utilities held up better than other major groups.

Foreign exchanges acted better. Sterling halted its plunge which had caused much uneasiness in sensitive staple markets. Curiously, these markets chose the day in which sterling was acting better for a sharp decline. The action of cotton was attributed to cumulative effects of increasing uncertainty over the Government's program, and brought forth a statement from the AAA that no change in the loan and adjustment program was planned. The gold currencies dipped, with the French franc losing .03 of a cent at 6.65 cents.

Among stocks losing about 2 to 3 points were American Can, Allied Chemical, Case, Johns-Mansville, Union Pacific, U. S. Industrial Alcohol, United Fruit and U. S. Rubber.

Oils acted a little better than of late, although Socony-Vacuum was again sold in volume, and dipped a fraction to a new low for the move.

Grains Reach Bottom Prices

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, March 11.—Demoralized by a severe attack in the cotton market, grain values reached fresh bottom records for the season.

An avalanche of selling was witnessed in all the grain pits, much of it to put a stop to losses by holders unable or unwilling to furnish additional protection to brokers. Extreme downturns of more than 3 cents a bushel took place both in wheat and corn, but rallies were in progress at the last.

Wheat closed nervous, 1½ to 2 cents under Saturday's finish; May, 93⅝@93¾; corn, 1½ to 2 down; May, 79@79½; oats, ⅞ to 1⅜ off, and provisions showing 12 cents to 35 cents decline.

Even before being struck by the cotton market tornado, grain prices were inclined to topple. Disturbing factors included new unsettlement of European exchange rates, as well as rainfalls that were reported as having put a stop to soil blowing in domestic wheat territory Southwest and as approaching to flood proportions in parts of the Ohio Valley.

Some trade experts asserted in particular that any extensive advance of domestic prices would invite a deluge of Argentine corn. On the other hand, exerting more or less effect as a check on grain price declines was a statement by a leading authority that whatever the amount of corn on farms the Government report may show on April 1, horses and mules are as numerous as a year ago and must have larger rations of corn.

Cotton Market.

New York, March 11 (AP).—A sensationally rapid break of from $7.90 to $9.35 a bale featured the cotton market today. Following the slump there were rallied on covering and trade buying. The market closed barely steady at a net decline of 96 to 119 points. The flood of selling came suddenly around midday and found the market without much support.

The selling movement was attributed to uncertainty regarding Government crop loans for next season. Later there were some reassuring reports regarding the Bankhead quota and the Administration's cotton program. Exports today, 6,289, making 3,480,805 so far this season. Port receipts, 4,498. United States port stock, 2,497,683.

Treasury Action to Redeem 2 Per Cent Bonds Commended in Financial Centers; Abrogation of National Bank Notes Arouses No Opposition.

By a Special Correspondent.

New York, March 11.—Redemption of the oustanding 2 per cent Government bonds which enjoy the circulation privilege, meets general favor in the financial district. Especially with present low interest rates and unprecedented excess reserves, the banks here have come to regard the circulation privilege as having chiefly advertising value. Accordingly, the elimination of national bank notes as one component element of our monetary system, originally contemplated when the Federal Reserve act was passed in 1913, will meet with indifference, especially from the larger national banks throughout the country.

The Secretary of the Treasury, by utilizing part of his impounded "gold profit" to pay off the circulation privilege bonds, actually has tended to prevent a certain amount of potential inflation. The national banks will have to draw down the additional reserves they will obtain at the Federal Reserve Banks initially through repayment of the circulation bonds through the latter in order to meet the resultant demand for Reserve notes to replace the retired national bank notes.

The status of national banks will be changed in that their liabilities will be reduced by the amount of the circulating notes retired, while their assets will be lowered to the extent of the repaid bonds. The Federal Reserve Banks, on the other hand, will hold more gold certificates as an asset, but will offset this through the increased amount of Federal Reserve notes that will become outstanding. Hence, part of the "gold profit" will thus have been absorbed by the Reserve banks harmlessly without causing any increase in the already tremendously swollen excess reserves of member banks.

Unification of Currency Really Deflationary.

The unification of the currency is thus more "deflationary" than "inflationary," it might be said for the benefit of those who like to think in these two much overworked terms.

There are now six different types of paper money in circulation in the United States. The Treasury notes of 1890, of which only a little more than a million are outstanding, are being redeemed in silver certificates as presented. The Federal Reserve Bank notes, authorized as an emergency currency at the time of the bank holiday, are also being redeemed. By midyear the great bulk of the national bank notes will have been paid off. Thus, only three types of paper money, Federal Reserve notes, silver certificates and United States notes (greenbacks) will be left.

The greenbacks may possibly be redeemed before long in the same way as the national bank notes are now being paid off, it is believed, since the gold reserve act of 1934 authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to do so. These Treasury noninterest bearing notes, a relic of the Civil War inflation, are outstanding in the amount of $346,000,000. Conservative students of monetary questions have long argued that these notes have no business in a modern monetary system, and that they should be redeemed as a symbol of the intention of the Government to refrain from resort to fiat paper money for the future.

Nearly Five Billions Paper Money in Circulation.

At the present time there is approximately $4,800,000,000 of paper money in circulation in the United States outside of the Treasury and the Federal Reserve Bank. About two-thirds of this total assumes the form of Federal Reserve notes, while national bank notes now aggregate some $800,000,000 and silver certificates $580,000,000. Under the silver certificate act of 1934, steady increases in the volume of silver certificates in circulation are to be expected, as the Treasury continues to purchase white metal. Aside from these silver certificates, however, it is believed to be the policy of the Treasury gradually to simplify the monetary system of the United States by retiring all other types of currency except Federal Reserve notes.

Paper money is a relatively inflexible element in the American monetary and credit system, owing to the far more widespread use of bank checks in the settlement of business and financial transactions. Hence, despite the great stress placed on the amount and kinds of paper money outstanding by badly informed popular writers and agitators, the amount of currency outstanding tends to remain about the same regardless of what the Government does. If more paper money is put out than people want, they simply deposit the excess in the banks, thus retiring it from active circulation.

Hence, retirement of the national bank notes, and possible later redemption of the greenbacks, will simply cause roughly a corresponding increase in the amount of outstanding Federal Reserve notes to take place. Later, as more silver certificates are issued, some of these Reserve notes will doubtless be retired as a result.

YES, MR. SPROCKETT.
SAY, HOW MUCH MONEY WILL MY GRAN'MA GET WHEN YOU SELL HER OLD HOME AND THE OIL WELLS FOR HER?
WELL, NOW, THAT'S HARD TO SAY, BUT IT WILL BE A GREAT DEAL.
I WAS JUS' THINKIN' IT'S A GOOD THING YOU'RE HONEST, 'CAUSE IF A CROOK GOT HOLD OF THAT MONEY, HE MIGHT NOT GIVE IT TO GRAN'MA.
YOU NEEDN'T WORRY ABOUT ME.
WONDER IF HE SUSPECTS ANYTHING? HE'S A SMART KID, AND I CAN SEE HE DOESN'T TRUST ME.
I'M NOT WORRIED, I WAS ONLY THINKIN'.

MAYBE I'M NOT CLEAR ABOUT IT MYSELF, BUT I'M SURE THERE ARE LOTS OF THINGS A "SPECIAL AUNTY" COULD DO IN EACH CASE — OR MAYBE THERE ARE THINGS WE COULD ALL DO TOGETHER — THAT'S WHY I WAS THINKING — IT MIGHT BE A GOOD IDEA TO START AN "AUNTY CLUB"

Walt Mason, Himself

Worth Living.

MEN ask, "Is life worth living?" when they encounter woe, when some large corn is giving discomfort to a toe; when they have got a spavin upon a creaking bone, and, tired of rubbing salve in, they wring their hands and groan. All joy is soon departed and pleasure's reign is brief, if one's so rabbit-hearted he runs from every grief. He is the sort of fellow who says that life's a frost, the man with streak of yellow, with ochre tints embossed. He is the man who's talking of jumping in the bay, but we don't see him walking that dark, sepulchral way. He says, "I'll keep on living a little while, I guess, and meantime I'll be giving an earfull of distress." He'll say that life is phoney whene'er a shadow's near, and all his talk's boloney, because it's based on fear. The past few hectic seasons were times that tried men's souls, and they had ample reasons for mournful rigmaroles. And every man was meeting with trouble on the hoof, some couldn't stand the beating, and they jumped off the roof. But most of us were giving our good old college yell, and found a joy in living, no matter what befell. Some comfort we could borrow from optimistic wheeze; "The sun will shine tomorrow, there'll be a pleasant breeze." This good old world's a daisy when all is said and done; although the times are crazy, we still may have some fun; each day some joy is giving to those who stand in line, and life is well worth living, however some folks whine.

Paul L. Miley, of the 3500 block of Tenth street northwest, was held to the grand jury in Montgomery County yesterday in connection with the death of William E. Marlin, of Takoma Park, Md., who was killed when an automobile driven by Miley collided with a truck February 25.

A passenger in Miley's car, Marlin was hurled from his seat against a telephone pole and injured fatally.

The driver of the truck was exonerated after the crash.

Crawford was a passenger in Youngerman's automobile.

District Gaining In Baby Bond Sale

City's Supply $209,775 as N. Y. Holds Lead.

In the baby bond sales campaign, Washington has forged ahead into a position with the big league cities from the standpoint of total sales.

The Treasury yesterday announced a total of $15,000,000 of the bonds had been sold at the close of business Saturday and that this city's total supply amounts to $209,775.

New York took first position in the table of cities and totals announced for the sale which began March 1 with a ceremonial sale of several baby bonds to President Roosevelt. The total for New York City was $1,100,081 (in Manhattan and the Bronx) and $195,131 in the three remaining burroughs.

Chicago was next with $816,634; Detroit third with $670,674. Other totals announced were: Kansas City, $32,643; Cleveland, $295,556; Philadelphia, $158,812; Los Angeles, $154,769; Baltimore, $116,475; Pittsburgh, $96,837; San Francisco, $95,000; Indianapolis, $64,087.

Senate Group Adopts Plan on Treasury Pay

The Senate Appropriations Committee yesterday adopted the compromise approved by the Treasury-Postoffice sub-committee relating to the payment of back salaries of 1,300 Treasury employes.

The compromise provides that the employes, who have been working without pay since December 1, 1934, will receive compensation in full until May 15. At that time, however, between 400 and 500 who were originally the target of the McKellar "patronage rider" will be dropped from the service.

An effort may be made in the Senate to reinstate all of the 1,300 employes as asked by President Roosevelt and Secretary Morgenthau, on the ground they are part of an experienced and efficient organization.

ROMANCE and glamour of Hollywood prove useful not only in movie advertising but in radio production. Production from studios there has more than tripled in the last few months and N. B. C. plans to erect a new building soon, with greater facilities for offices, studios and audiences.

Nearly all Hollywood's star talent has been on the air lately with but few exceptions—Greta Garbo, Mae West, Norma Shearer and Shirley Temple. Garbo probably lives up to the rumor of her reticence, another rumor indicates that Shirley remains away from the mike at her parents' wishes.

As for N. B. C.'s new building, it will be constructed with an eye on television, according to M. H. Aylesworth, president of N. B. C., Radio Pictures and chairman of the board of RKO. "Television," he said, "will be forced out of the laboratories when the public demands it. And it will become a million-dollar business. When that time comes, N. B. C. will be first to offer it."

C. B. S.'s Hollywood facilities are centered in the metropolitan area of Los Angeles at KHJ studios. While N. B. C. broadcasts from moviedom are all sponsored, C. B. S. maintains several unsponsored ones.

Changes Made In District Bill

Chairman Norton Offers House Old-Age Measure With Amendments.

Undaunted by the refusal of her sub-committee to act on the District old age pension bill at this time, Chairman Mary T. Norton, of the House District Committee, yesterday reintroduced the bill with the amendments she had offered to the sub-committee.

"I think with these amendments written into the bill," she said, "it will be clear that the bill ties in with the national social security legislation and that there is no need for delay."

A sub-committee headed by Representative Virginia Jenckes (Democrat), of Indiana, had postponed action until the national old age pension takes a more definite form.

The amendments accomplish the following:

Remove the $35-a-month pension limitation, leaving the amount to the discretion of the District Commissioners or their agency.

Reduce the residential requirement from 10 to five years.
